1738 Calvary, a term used in catholic countries for a kind of chapel of devotion, raised on a hillock near a city... Such is the Calvary of St. Valerian, near Paris; which is accompanied with several little chapels, in each whereof is represented in sculpture one of the mysteries of the passion: CHAMBERS, Cycl. 1797 Encyc. Brit.

3. See quotation. Does Cockeram give a loose paraphrase of 'the place of a skull'?

1626 Calvary, A place for dead mens bones: COCKERAM, Pt. 1. (2nd Ed.).

calx, pl. calces, sb.: Lat., 'lime'.

1. powder produced by calcining metal or mineral which the alchemists and early chemists considered to be the essential part of the substance calcined. Also, metaph.

1471 For in lesse space our Calke wyll not be made, | Able to tayne with colour which wyll not vade: G. RIPLEY, Comp. Alch., in Ashmole's Theat. Chem. Brit., p. 130 (1652). 1610 his faces there, calcined. | Out of that calx, I ha' wonne the salt of MERCURY: B. JONSON, Alch., ii. 3, Wks., p. 624 (1616). 1652 He intended it for a dissolvent of calx of gold: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. 1, p. 284 (1872). 1658 The rest subside in coal, calx or ashes: SIR TH. BROWN, Hydriolaph., p. 45.

2. lime.

1797 CALX properly signifies lime, but is also used by chemists: Encyc. Brit.

calx vive, phr.: calx, Lat.; vive, Fr.; Anglicised as calce vive: quicklime.

camera lucida, phr.: Late Lat. (fr. two Lat. words), 'light chamber': a contrivance invented by Dr. Hook in 1668 for throwing a colored image of anything on to a wall in a light room; the name was transferred to a contrivance for throwing, by means of a peculiarly shaped prism, a colored image of any object on to a horizontal surface, so that it can be traced accurately.

1753 Camera lucida, a contrivance of Dr Hook for making the image of any thing appear on a wall in a light room, either by day or night: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl. 1886 He was an expert draughtsman with a camera-lucida: Athenaeum, Jan. 16, p. 109/3.

*camera obscura, phr.: Late Lat. (fr. two Lat. words), 'dark chamber': a dark chamber into which light is only admitted through a small opening, so that images of external objects are thrown upon an interior surface opposite to the opening. A double-convex lens placed in the aperture will throw upon a surface placed at the proper distance a perfectly clear picture reversed. The principle was discovered in 16 c. by Baptista Porta. In photography, the chamber is a box, the length of which can be varied so as to throw the image on to a sensitive plate at the proper focus.

1725 When you shut the doors of this grotto, it becomes on the instant, from a luminous room, a Camera obscura: POPE, Letters, p. 171 (1737). 1738 Construction of a portable camera obscura: CHAMBERS, Cycl., s.v. 1777 It is such a perfecting of the camera obscura, that it no longer depends on the sun and serves for taking portraits with a force and exactness incredible: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VI. p. 483 (1857). 1798 Roger Bacon...describes the Camera Obscura with all sorts of glasses that magnify or diminish any object: Anecd. of Distinguished Persons, Vol. I. p. 2. 1819 he offered to shew it to the King, with the camera obscura and telescope: BOWDICH, Mission to Ashantee, Pt. I. ch. iii. p. 46. 1826 A camera obscura I can be amused by for hours, when man is the thing exhibited, — man Lilliputianised: Ref. on a Ramble to Germany, p. 136. 1827 If I had a sort of spiritual Camera Obscura that could reflect the constructions of my brain and fix them: COLERIDGE, Alaric Watts, Vol. I. p. 289 (1884). 1839 The third is the placing the prepared plate properly in the camera obscura to the action of light: J. S. MEMES, Tr. Daguerre's Hist. Photogen. Drawing, p. 55. 1883 The shadow [is] thrown on a plate in the camera obscura: Standard, Aug. 27, p. 5/2.

Castalia: Lat. fr. Gk. Κασταλία: name of the celebrated fountain of the Muses on Mount Parnassus, the waters of which were supposed to inspire those who drank them with poetic power. Hence, the adj. Castalian, = 'poetic'. English poets seem to have agreed to make the second a long, though it ought to be short, as it is in the Anglicised Cas- taly. A less known Castalia was a prophetic fountain at Daphne, near Antioch in Syria.

1591 Helicon, | So oft bedew'd with our learned layes, | And speaking streames of pure Castalion: SPENS, Compl., Teares of Muses, 273. 1603 All thy worth, yet, thyself must patronise, | By quaffing more of the Castalian head: G. CHAPMAN, in B. Jonson's Wks., p. 74 (1860). 1667 th' inspir'd Castalian Spring: MILTON, P. L., IV. 274, p. 133 (1725). 1742 a purer Stream... than that which burst | From fam'd Castalia: E. YOUNG, Night Thoughts, v. p. 80 (1773). 1781 A stream of prophecy... flow'd from the Castalian fountain of Daphne: GIBSON, Decl. & Fall, Vol. IV. ch. xxiii. p. 119 (1813). 1782 would make your hair stand on end instead of dipping you in Castalia: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VIII. p. 252 (1838). 1785 true pray'r | Has flow'd from lips wet with Castalian dew: COWPER, Tash, III. Poems, Vol. II. p. 76 (1808). 1805 Though from the Muse's chalice I may pour | No precious dew of Aganippe's well | Or Castaly: H. KIRKE WHITE, Death Nelson, 20. 1812 From this part descend the fountain and the "Dews of Castalie": BYRON, Childe Harold, I. i. note. 1847 I led you then to all the Castalies; | I fed you with the milk of every Muse: TENNYSON, Princ., IV. Wks., Vol. IV. p. 107 (1886).

**castanet* (L = L), sb.: Eng. fr. Sp. castañetas (pl.), or It. castagnette (pl.), cf. Florio, "Castagnette, little shels, such as they use that daunce the canaries, to make a noise or sound or clack with their fingers": pairs of clappers, of wood or other material, used to accompany dance or song, originally played by the dancers themselves. The negro 'bones' are a simple form of these instruments.

1662 the Tsarpanes, or Castagnetts, which they had in their hands, in the managing whereof they were very expert: J. DAVIES, Ambassadors Trav., Bk. v. p. 207 (1669). 1665 dance a Saraband with Castaniets: DRYDEN, Ind. Emp., IV. 3, Wks., Vol. I. p. 136 (1701). 1669 Dance with Gittars and Castaniets: SHADWELL, Roy. Shep., II. p. 27. 1681 Castanets (from the Lat. Castanea, a Chestnut, which they resemble) Snappers which Dancers keep time with in dancing Sarabands: BLOUNT, Glossogr. 1776 a couple then danced with castanets and the other swarthy ladies... began smoking: R. CHANDLER, Trav. Greece, p. 133. 1797 At Benevento I first saw people dancing with castanets: SOUTHEY, Lett. dur. Resid. in Spain, p. 86. 1832 we heard the notes of a guitar, and the click of castanets: W. IRVING, Alhambra, p. 25. 1845 let all... listen to the song, the guitar, the castanet: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. I. p. 77. — the sound of the castanet wakens the most listless: ib., p. 187.

[The Sp. castañeta = 'cracking or snapping of the fingers', which accompanies some Spanish dances. The word is derived from castaña (It. castagna) = 'chestnut', the sound being compared to the cracking of chestnuts on the fire.]

**cast(e)*, sb.: Eng. fr. Port. casta, = 'race', 'family': a tribe, clan, family. In India the term also comes to denote special occupation and social status according to the institutions of Brahminism. The four principal Brahmin castes are, the Brahmins or religious order, the Kshetriyas or military order, the Vaisyas or merchants, and the Sudras or artisan and laboring classes. Hence, the term is applied by extension of meaning to social position generally, to the breed of domestic animals, and finally, to status of any kind.

1. an Oriental family, clan, or tribe.

1625 about which part liued the Cassa or Caste of Alteid Absadock: PURCHAS, Pilgrims, Vol. II. Bk. vi. p. 861. 1662 the same Caste, or Family: J. DAVIES, Tr. Mandelslo, Bk. I. p. 51 (1669). 1791 their division into separate tribes or casts, the members of which never intermarry: ROBERTSON, Anc. India, § 1, Wks., Vol. IX. p. 24 (1824).

2. an order or class of Hindoo society, the division being based on descent.

1613 The Banians kill nothing; there are thirtie and odd severall Casts of these that differ something in Religion, and may not eat with each other: N. WITHINGTON, in Purchas' Pilgrims, I. 485 (1625). [Yule] 1630 This world was to be continued for four ages, and to be peopled by four casts or sorts of men: LORD, Dicov. Banians, p. 3. [L.] 1665 a Book (the Shaster by name) divided into three Tracts, dedicated to the three great Casts... with peculiar instructions to each Cast or Tribe: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 49 (1677). abt. 1760 The distinction of the Gentoo into their tribes or Casts, forms another considerable object of their religion: GROSE, Voyage, I. 201 (1772). \*catalfalque, sb.: Fr., or Eng. fr. Fr. ( $\angle = \angle$ ). See catalfalco. Also, metaph.

1643 In the nave of the church lies the catalfalque, or hearse, of Louis XIII.: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 42 (1850). 1774 refusing to assist at the catalfalque of the late King: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VI. p. 102 (1857). 1835 each corpse was brought up the church and placed on a great catalfalque in the middle of the dome: H. GREVILLE, Diary, p. 66. bef. 1863 the catalfalque...is really a noble and imposing-looking edifice, with tall pillars supporting a grand dome: THACKERAY, Sec. Fan. Napoleon, p. 241 (1879). 1878 The black and yellow catalfalque known as the 'best bed': GEO. ELIOT, Dan. Dermda, Bk. I. ch. III. p. 17. 1883 The catalfalque stands in front of the altar: Standard, Sept. 1, p. 5/6. 1884 I saw the catalfalque of curls...that the hair-dresser piled on her head: Tr. Galdos' Trafalgar, p. 104.

catagrapha, sb. pl.: Gk. κατάγραφα, properly neut. of adj. κατάγραφος, 'drawn in profile'. See quotation. The Anglicised catagraph, 'a drawing in outline', is probably fr. Gk. sb. κατάγραφῆς, 'a delineation'.

1638 Simon Cleonaeus was the first that found out Catagrapha, that is, oblique or travers images, varying the countenances of men, by making them not only to looke backe, but up and downe also: JUNIUS, Anc. Painting, Bk. III. ch. IV. p. 290.

*Cataian, adj. to Late Lat. Cataia, = 'Cathay' or 'China'. Used as sb. in 16, 17 cc., the word meant either a liar or a thief.

1598 I will not believe such a Cataian, though the priest o' the town commended him for a true man: SHAKS., Merry Wives, II. 1, 148. 1604 I'll make a wild Cataian of forty such: Honest W., in Old Plays, III. 435. [Nares] 1649 Hang him, bold Cataian, he indites finely: DAVENANT, Love & Hon. [ib.]

catalêpsis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. κατάληψις: a seizure, a state of real or apparent unconsciousness into which hysterical subjects may fall. Generally Anglicised as catalepsy.

1671 Catalepsis...is a sudden detention or benumbing both of Mind and Body: SALMON, Syn. Med., I. lii. 126. 1708 KERSEY. bef. 1735 a disease called a catalepsis: ARBUTHNOT. [T.]

catalêxis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. κατάληξις, = 'termination': the absence of part of the last foot of a verse, gen. the ending of a verse with a long syllable instead of a complete foot.

1830 Since the Cretic foot is by itself a catalectic order, Cretic verses are for the most part terminated by that same foot, and have no other catalexis: J. SEAGER, Tr. Hermann's Metres, Bk. II. ch. xix. p. 46.

\*catalogue ( $\angle = \angle$ ), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. catalogue: a list, esp. a systematic list, often arranged in alphabetical order, as the catalogue of a library, a list made for a special purpose (as an auctioneer's catalogue of a sale); not now applied to persons in England, as it still is in Scotland and America.

1576 his name is not read in all the Catalogue of the Saxons: LAMBARDE, Peramb. Kent, p. 354. 1586 The whole...frame of this earth seemeth blundered and confounded with the innumerable Catalogues of Interpreters: FERNE, Blas. Gentrie, Ded. 1589 in euerie wrinkle was a catalogue of woes: R. GREENE, Menaphon, p. 28 (1880). 1598 the Catalog of books that I have read through: FLORIO, sig. b 1 r 5. bef. 1603 a great Christian Doctor, who hath placed Seneca in the Catalogue of Saints: NORTH, Lives of Epamin., &c., added to Plut., p. 1225 (1612). 1605 the count-lesse catalogue of those I have cured: B. JONSON, Volp., II. 2, Wks., p. 459 (1616). 1611 I could then have look'd on him, without the help of Admiration, though the Catalogue of his Endowments had bin tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by Items: SHAKS., Cymb., I. 4, 5. 1620 the Catalogue of the Divine Books: BRENT, Tr. Soave's Hist. Comenc. Trent, Bk. II. p. 145 (1676). 1657 Other innumerable things there were, printed in his Catalogue by Mr. Ashmole: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 340 (1872). 1665 ranked in the catalogue of the Heathen Gods: STR. TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 107 (1677). 1675 marking them [books] in the Bodleian Catalogue...beyond my merit or ambition: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 249 (1872). 1694 They are printing catalogues of all y<sup>e</sup> manuscripts in all y<sup>e</sup> publick and all y<sup>e</sup> private libraries in England: HATTON Corresp., Vol. II. p. 203 (1878). 1712 a long catalogue of those virtues and good qualities he expects to find in the person of a friend: Spectator, No. 385, May 22, Vol. IV. p. 296 (1826). 1776 he was inserted in the Catalogue of Athenian divinities: R. CHANDLER, Trav. Greece, p. 59. 1785 station'd there | As duly as the Langford of the show, | With glass at eye, and catalogue in hand: COWPER, Tast., VI. Poems, Vol. II. p. 180 (1808).

*catalogue raisonné, phr.: Fr., 'analytical catalogue': a catalogue based on analysis, a catalogue arranged and executed on scientific principles, giving a full description of each item registered.

1803 A catalogue raisonné, if executed with judgment and impartiality, would be a very useful appendage to every work: Edin. Rev., Vol. 3, p. 70. 1806 While on a visit, without a servant-counting out your linen (shaking piece by piece) for the wash, and drawing up, at intervals, a catalogue raisonné of the litter: BERESFORD, Miseries, Vol. I. p. 108 (5th Ed.). 1816 the ingenious Mr. Tassie has made a collection amounting to 160000 gems of which a catalogue raisonné was published 1792: J. DALLAWAY, Of Stat. & Sculpt., p. 299. 1828 his poem on Zoology, considered with reference to the subject, is little more than a catalogue raisonné: Harrobian, p. 82. 1843 Even after he has learned as much as people usually do learn from others, will the notions of things contained in his individual mind afford as sufficient a basis for a catalogue raisonné as the notions are in the minds of all mankind: J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. I. p. 22 (1856). 1888 A specially useful feature will be a catalogue raisonné, descriptive of all the different sets of slides now on sale: Academy, Nov. 3, p. 288/3.

catatooon, sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. catalogne: fabric from Catalonia, a province of Spain. Cf. Cotgr., "Catalogne, A (white) Spanish rug; or, a coarse couerlet of Catologna".

bef. 1605 Buffyn, catatowne...single chamblets: In Beck's Drapeer's Dict., p. 16.

*catarpa, sb.: N. Amer. Ind.: name of a genus of trees (Nat. Order Bignoniaceae), native in N. America, W. Indies, Japan, and China.

1764 The Catarpa Tree...Bignonia Urucil... This Tree was unknown to the inhabited parts of Carolina, till I brought the seeds from the remoter parts of the country: CATESBY, Nat. Hist. Carolina, Vol. I. p. 49. 1767 deciduous ornamental trees...such as poplar, almond, catarpa, tulip tree: J. ABERCROMBIE, Ev. Man own Gardener, p. 180 (1803). 1797 The catarpa...deserves a place in all curious shrubberies: Encyc. Brit., s.v. Bignonia.

catalysis (=  $\angle$  =  $\angle$ ), sb.: Gk. κατάλυσις, = 'dissolution' (esp. of a government).

1. a rapid decay, a dissolution, a bringing to an end.

1655-6 I perceive by your symptoms, how the spirits of pious men are affected in this sad catalysis: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 69 (1872).

1667 While they were in thoughts of head concerning it, the sad catalysis did come, and swept away eleven hundred thousand of the nation: JER. TAYLOR, [L.] 1688 I look for no mighty improvement of mankind in this declining age and catalysis: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 290 (1872).

2. in Physics, the effect produced by contact with a chemical re-agent which was supposed to cause decomposition and recomposition without itself entering into actual combination with the substances affected.

\*catamaran (=  $\angle$  =  $\angle$ ), sb.: Anglo-Ind. fr. Hindustani of the Deccan katmaran, ultimately fr. Tamil kaṭṭu, = 'binding', maram, = 'wood'.

1. a raft used in India and Ceylon as a surf-boat, formed of logs of wood tied together; similar rafts are used in the Brazils.

1673 Coasting along some Cattamarans (Logs lashed to that advantage that they waft off all their Goods, only having a Sail in the midst and Paddles to guide them) made after us: FRYER, E. India, 24 (1698). [Yule] abt. 1780 The wind was high, and the ship had but two anchors, and in the next forenoon parted from that by which she was riding, before that one which was coming from the shore on a Catamaran could reach her: ORME, Hist. Mil. Trans., &c., III. 300. [ib.]

1836 None can compare to the Catamarans and the wonderful people that manage them...each catamaran has one, two, or three men: Lett. from Madras, 34. [ib.] 1846 The catamarans used in the Brazils, and which are also common in the East Indies: YOUNG, Naut. Dict., [L.] 1883 Of these animating diversions...some idea may be formed by those who have seen a catamaran: Sat. Rev., Vol. 55, p. 411.

2. a flat-bottomed boat or a raft used for setting hostile ships on fire.

1804 The Catamaran Project: Ann. Reg., Vol. XLVI. p. 143/1. 1821 immense sums...have been...expended on Barracks, Magazines, Martello-Towers, Catamarans: In W. Cobbett's Rural Rides, Vol. I. p. 51 (1885).

3. a vixen, a scold.

1779 I imagine there will be a large company. The invitation is to dine and spend the evening. Too much at a time. I shall be in danger of crying out, with Mr. Head, Catamaran, whatever that may mean, for it seemed to imply tediousness and disgust: JOHNSON, Lett., &c., Vol. II. p. 79 (1788). 1834 The cursed drunken old catamaran: MARRYAT, Peter Simple, ch. vi. [Davies] 1882 He and his little catamaran: THACKERAY, Philip, Vol. II. ch. viii. p. 115 (1887).

catamēnia, sb. pl.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. καταμήνια: the menses (q. v.).

1750 Two ancient Hindoo sages are of opinion, that if the marriage is not consummated before the first appearance of the catamenia, the girl becomes 'degraded in rank': DUNN, Unity of Human Species. [L.] bef. 1771 I am assured by persons of credit, that if they are...approached by a woman in her catamenia, they infallibly expire: SMOLLETT, Trav., Bk. I. Let. xxii. p. 346. [Jodrell] catamite (=  $\angle$  =  $\angle$ ), sb.: Eng. fr. Lat. catamitus, Old Lat. form of Gk. Γανυμήδης; see Ganymede: a youth who submits to unnatural crime.

1603 Another time Cassander forced him even against his will to kisse a young baggage or Calamite [sic] named Pythou: HOLLAND, Tr. Plat. Mor., p. 412. 1665 dancing girls and painted Catamites; that nefandum peccatum being there tolerated: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 162 (1677).

cataplastm (=  $\angle$  =  $\angle$ ), Eng. fr. Fr. cataplasme; cataplasma, Lat. fr. Gk. κατάπλασμα: sb.: a plaster, a poultice.

1641 the Cataplastmes made of barley meale: R. COPLAND, Tr. Guydo's Quest., &c., sig. 9 f ii v. 1643 a good remedye to heale the disease, called alopecia, layed on in the fourme of a cataplasme: TRAHERON, Tr. Vigo's Chirurg., fol. cxxxvii v. 1. — applied...after the maner of cataplasma: ib., fol. cxxxvii v. 2. 1563 emplasters, cataplastmes, vnguent, fomentations: T. GALE, Emchrid., fol. 39 v. 1698 applie thereunto a Pultis or Cataplasme of Barley meale: G. W., Cures of the Pisoned, sig. D 1 v. 1601 [followed] stamped and applied with water it is an excellent cataplasme for the Kings evil: HOLLAND, Tr. Plat. N. H., Bk. 20, ch. 9, Vol. II. p. 50. 1604 I bought an unction of a mountebank, | So mortal that, but dip a knife in it, | Where it draws blood no cataplastm so rare, | Collected from all simples that have virtue | Under the moon, can save the thing from death | That is but scratch'd withal: SHAKS., Ham., iv. 7. 144.

\*catapult (=  $\angle$  =  $\angle$ ), Eng. fr. Fr. catapulte; catapulta, Late Lat. fr. Gk. καταπέλτης: sb.: an engine for hurling large stones or darts. The name has been transferred to an instrument for hurling small stones, consisting of a forked stick with a piece of elastic, the ends of which are fastened to the branches of the fork.

1605 The balista violently shot great stones and quarrels, as also the catapults: CAMDEN, Remains. [T.] 1769 My fist is a Balista, | My arm a Catapulta: B. THORNTON, Tr. Plantus, Vol. I. p. 323. 1829 long laborious lines of ordnance...lombards, ribadoquines, catapults: W. IRVING, Conq. of Granada, ch. li. p. 300 (1850). 1833 Catapulta or Mangonels to cast large stones to a distance: J. DALLAWAY, Disc. Archit. Eng., &c., p. 279.

\*catarrh (=  $\angle$  =  $\angle$ ), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. catarrhe: a morbid discharge from some membrane connected with one of the outlets of the body, esp. of the mucous membrane of the eyes and nose, in which case the disease is popularly called cold in the head.

1628 specialiye if the catarrh procede of cold matter: PAYNELL, Tr. Reg. Sal., sig. a ii v. 1640 the colde whereof is dangerous to bring them to Catarrhes and poses: RAYNALD, Birth Man., Bk. IV. ch. vi. p. 109 (1613). 1643 it represseth the catarrh: TRAHERON, Tr. Vigo's Chirurg., fol. cclviii v. 2. 1663 To breake botches, impostumes, catarrhes, or sores coming in the throte: W. WARDE, Tr. Alessio's Secr., Pt. II. fol. 16 v. 1603 Coughes, and Catarrhs: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Furies, p. 281 (1608). 1605 a humide fluxe, or catarrhe: B. JONSON, Volp., ii. 2, Wks., p. 468 (1616). 1607 the Catarrh or Rheume: TOPSELL, Four-f. Beasts, p. 348. 1620 there fell upon him such a sudden coldness, as if he had been frozen...with a fearful benumbedness, being the first time in his life that he had known what a Catarrh was: BRENT, Tr. Soave's Hist. Conc. Trent., p. xvi. (1676). 1663 They! feel the Pulses of the Stars, | To find out Agues, Coughs, Catarrhs: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. I. Cant. i. p. 46. bef. 1782 coughs, and rheums, and phthisis, and catarrh: COWPER, Convers., Poems, Vol. I. p. 167 (1808).

Variants, 16c. catare, cattarre, 16, 17 cc. catarrhe.

catastasis (=  $\angle$  =  $\angle$ ), sb.: Eng. fr. Gk. κατάστασις, = 'a setting': Rhet.: the part of a speech in which the case is set forth, or in which the general drift of the speech is indicated; also, in a drama, the main part of the action which leads up to the catastrophe.

1632 [See epitasis]. 1679 I saw it Scene by Scene, and helped him in the writing, it breaks well, the Protasis good, the Catastasis excellent, there's no Episod, but the Catastrophe is admirable: SHADWELL, True Widow, i. p. 6. 1681 Catastasis (Gr.) the third part of a Comedy: BLOUNT, Glossogr. 1761 the Catastasis or the ripening of the incidents and passions for their bursting forth in the fifth act: STERN, Trist. Shand., iv. Wks., p. 169 (1839). 1837 Consider therefore this pitiable Twentieth of June as a futility: no catastrophe, rather a catastasis, or heightening: CARLYLE, Fr. Rev., Vol. II. Bk. vi. ch. i. p. 183 (1888).

\*catastrophe (=  $\angle$  =  $\angle$ ), catastrophy, sb.: Eng. fr. Gk. καταστροφή, = 'an overturning'.

1. the concluding action of a drama, which generally consists in a sudden resolution of the intricacies and perplexities of the plot, and a reversal or upsetting of the course which events have seemed likely to take, commonly called a dénouement (q. v.); also, metaph. (with an allusion to the drama expressed or implied).

1540 wherupon is grounded the catastrophe of this comedy: PALSgrave, Tr. Acolastus, sig. U ii v. 1579 and a fit Catastrophe: GOSSON, Schools Ab., Ep. 1, 77. (Arber). 1588 The catastrophe is a Nuptial: SHAKS., L. L. L., iv. 1. 77. 1589 attend this actual Catastrophe: W. WARNER, Albion's England, p. 158. 1591 For all mans life me seemes a Tragedy, | Full of sad sights and sore Catastrophes: SPENS., Compl., Tears of Muses, 158. 1609 Shall I goe fetch the ladies to the catastrophe? B. JONSON, Sil. Wom., iv. 5, Wks., p. 580 (1616). 1646 His subject for the most part tragical, to w<sup>ch</sup> he put an il Catastrophe: HOWELL, Lewis XIII., p. 181. 1655 After a whining prologue, who would have look'd for | Such a rough catastrophe? MASSINGER, Guardian, i. 1, Wks., p. 349/2 (1830). 1679 [See catastasis]. bef. 1733 no preconceived Drama could...tend to its final Catastasis, more regular and naturally: R. NORTH, Examen, i. ii. 28, p. 44 (1740). 1761 it has its Protasis, Epitasis, Catastasis, its Catastrophe or Peripetia, growing one out of the other in it, in the order Aristotle first planted them: STERN, Trist. Shand., iv. Wks., p. 168 (1839). 1771 such a farce! such a dénouement! such a catastrophe! SMOLLETT, Humph. Cl., p. 107/2 (1882). 1772 Let them proceed as they have begun, and your Majesty need not doubt that the Catastrophe will do no dishonour to the conduct of the piece: JUNIUS, Letters, Vol. II. No. xxxv. p. 39. 1812 But it has impaired their dramatic excellence, by dispensing them too much from the necessity of preparing their catastrophes by a gradation of natural events: JEFFREYS, Essays, Vol. I. p. 110 (1844).

2. a decisive event, a complete overturning, a signal misfortune, a (disastrous) conclusion. In Geol., a stupendous convulsion of the earth's surface regarded as a cause of geological phenomena.

1601 This his good melancholly oft began | On the Catastrophe and heele of pastime: SHAKS., All's Well, i. 2, 57. 1615 to make the catastrophe more horrid: GEO. SANDYS, Trav., p. 271 (1632). 1620 But it is certain that the

Catastrophe of the Council, which it was thought could not possibly have a quiet conclusion, had beginning in this time: BRENT, Tr. Scav's Hist. Couns. Trent, bk. vii. p. 659 (1676). bef. 1631 with patience see | What this mad times' catastrophe will be: DRAYTON, To W. Browne. [R.] bef. 1641 the prologue to her fall and lives catastrophe: T. HEYWOOD, Englands Elisabeth, p. 16 (1641). bef. 1658 If by the fall of Luminaries, we | May safely guess the World's Catastrophe: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 215 (1687). bef. 1670 And the King being come to Salisbury in September with a full Court, it came to a Catastrophe: J. HACKET, Abb. Williams, Pt. II. 21, p. 30 (1693). 1671 What a Devilish Catastrophe is this? SHADWELL, Humorists, iv. p. 54. 1709 fail'd not to compare her... to Donna Olympia of Rome, and wish'd her the same Catastrophe: MRS. MANLEY, New Atal., Vol. II. p. 157 (2nd Ed.). 1719 the great Catastrophe of this Day [Good Friday]: Spectator, No. 356, Apr. 18, p. 519/2 (Morley). bef. 1733 this amazing Catastrophe of Godfrey's Murder: R. NORTH, Examen, i. iii. 123, p. 199 (1740). 1764 he furnished me with two vials of poison for the dismal catastrophe I had planned: SMOLLETT, Ferd. Ct. Fathom, ch. xxvi. Wks., Vol. IV. p. 142 (1817). 1856 My mind never realizes the complete catastrophe, the destruction of all Franklin's crews: E. K. KANE, Arctic Explor., Vol. I. ch. xx. p. 246. 1859 There are, in the paleontological sciences, two antagonist doctrines: catastrophes and uniformity: WHEWELL, Nov. Org. Renov., p. 25. [L.]

causa, sb.: Lat.: a cause, that which produces, or contributes to the production of, an effect. The word is used in many metaphysical phrases, as causa efficiens, an efficient cause; causa movens, a moving cause, an initiating cause, a first cause, the last item arrived at when tracing back the elements of a chain of causation; causa proxima, an immediate cause; causa remota, a remote cause; causa secunda, an intermediate cause.

1629 The Father may be said to be Causa movens, the Son operans, the Spirit absolvens; the Father wills it, the Son works it, the Holy Ghost accomplisheth it: T. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. 11. p. 115 (1862). 1781 so that the expansive force of the air is the causa proxima, the weight of the atmosphere the causa remota of the suspension of the mercury: T. REID, Corresp., Wks., p. 60/2 (1846). 1696 nor do any give a firmer...assent to that metaphysical principle, causa secunda non movet, nisi mota [does not become active unless acted upon]: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. 11. p. 171 (1865).

causa causae est causa causati, phr.: Late Lat.: the cause of the cause is the cause of the effect. A legal and philosophical maxim.

1694 according to the rule, that causa causae est causa causati, they [i.e. such motions] may be justly charged upon our score: S. CHARNOCK, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. v. p. 291 (1866). 1781 Your Lordship knows the maxim, Causa causae est causa causati: T. REID, Corresp., Wks., p. 60/2 (1846).

causa causans, phr.: Late Lat.: a causing cause, an effective cause, a cause which is actually operative in producing the result.

1824 the causa causans of all the improvements that have ever been made: Edin. Rev., Vol. 40, p. 6. 1831 the causa causans, by whose...interposition the old laws of nature may be...permanently changed: ib., Vol. 52, p. 392. 1882 Some of the less charitable observers were inclined to regard the real causa causans to be the necessity felt by their official chiefs for assigning in action a presentable raison d'être for their existence: GREG, Misc. Essays, ch. i. p. 7.

causa mali, phr.: Lat.: cause of mischief.

1877 The causa mali, then, in both plays is the prolongation of a visit: Athenaeum, July 14, p. 49/1.

causa sine qua non, phr.: Late Lat., lit. 'a cause without which not': an indispensable cause or condition, a cause or condition without which a certain effect or result is impossible. Causae sine quibus non, = 'causes without which not'. See sine qua non.

1602 Shall I be the efficient instrumentall cause or causa sine qua non, of so many great, worshipfull, honorable and princely heires: W. WATSON, Quodlibets of Relig. & State, p. 210. 1638 these inherent dispositions are exacted on our part as causa sine quibus non, as necessary conditions: CHILLINGWORTH, Wks., Vol. III. p. 264 (1820). 1650 ignorance is but the causa sine qua non of sinning: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. IV. p. 164 (1862). 1659 Whether they will call it an Efficient Cause, or only a Causa sine qua non, Election & Ordination must go to make a Pope: R. BAXTER, Key for Catholicks, ch. xviii. p. 74. 1684 that [i.e. Christ's Resurrection] was not his glory, but the beginning of his exaltation, a causa sine qua non: S. CHARNOCK, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. V. p. 49 (1865). 1696 faculties cannot act without some qualities...required as necessary conditions, causa sine quibus non, without which there can be no acts: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. II. p. 117 (1865). 1759 the third cause, or rather what logicians call the Causa sine qua non, and, without which, all that was done was of no manner of significance: STERNE, Trist. Shand., II. xix. Wks., p. 103 (1839).

causator, sb.: Low Lat., noun of agent to causare, = 'to cause': a causer, he who, or that which, produces an effect.

*chaussée, sb.: Fr.: causeway, causey (fr. Old Fr. causée), highway.

1809 This order is kept up through the wood and on the chaussée in the suburb, till you come to the city, and some citrassières ride to and fro with drawn sabres: MATY, Tr. Riesbeck's Trav. Germ., Let. xxvii. Pinkerton, Vol. VI. p. 95. 1813 If the march from thence to the chaussée is difficult for a large body of men, it might be made at different periods of the day by the troops, as they should be required for the reliefs in the trenches: WELLINGTON, Disp., Vol. X. p. 547 (1838). 1840 From hence a chaussée leads across to Pest: FRASER, Koordinat., &c., Vol. II. Let. xix. p. 466. 1844 As he approached the chaussée, the 2nd and 3rd battalions of the 2nd Elbe-landwehr... advanced to his support: W. SIBORNE, Waterloo, Vol. I. ch. vi. p. 214. 1855 Prussia had no chaussée till 1787: LEWES, Goethe, I. I. p. 319.

*chaussure, sb.: Fr.: shoes, boots, equipment for the feet.

1841 no risk is incurred of encountering aught offensive to the olfactory nerves, or injurious to the chaussure: LADY BLESSINGTON, Idler in France, Vol. I. p. 2. 1848 "I delight in Hessian boots," said Rebecca. Jos Sedley, who admired his own legs prodigiously, and always wore this ornamental chaussure, was extremely pleased at this remark: THACKERAY, Van. Fair, Vol. I. ch. iv. p. 32 (1879). 1854 but what is Mrs. Newcome's foot compared with that sweet little chaussure which Miss Baughton exhibits and withdraws: — Newcomes, Vol. I. ch. xix. p. 210 (1879). 1865 no chaussure more bewitching than the slipper...into which the foot she held out to the fire to warm was slipped: OUIDA, Strathmore, Vol. I. ch. vii. p. 113.

chautare: Anglo-Ind. See chowter.

*Chauvin: Fr.: name of the principal character in Scribe's Soldat Laboureur, one of the first Napoleon's veterans, characterised by absolute adoration of his chief. Chauvins of a similar type are found as characters in other French plays. Representative of excessive desire for national aggrandisement, or of boastful and aggressive display of patriotism. Hence, Chauvinism, Chauvinist(ic).

1882 the Chauvins (Anglice, Jingoists), who are endeavouring to loosen the ties of amity from which France and England have derived such valuable advantage: Standard, Dec. 16, p. 5. 1878 The country which has since been the birthplace of Chauvinism, put away national pride almost with passion: J. C. MORISON, Gibbon, ch. vii. p. 100. 1883 It is at the mercy of Chauvinist speculators: Standard, Sept. 8, p. 47. 1886 [These] considerations...are not advanced in anything like a chauvinistic spirit: Athenaeum, Oct. 9, p. 470/3. 1888 The realistic sketch of Mr. Macarthy Grice, an American chauvinist, makes 'The Modern Warning' amusing: ib., Nov. 17, p. 660/1.

*cheese, sb.: English slang: anything good, first-rate in quality, thoroughly satisfactory. Col. Yule suggests that the word is Anglo-Ind. fr. Pers. and Hind. chis, = 'thing', 'the real chis' being used instead of 'the real thing'. Davies, however, says there is "an old proverb 'After cheese comes nothing'—cheese being the crown and completion of dinner".

abt. 1850 "You look like a prince in it, Mr. Lint," pretty Rachel said, coaxing him with her beady black eyes. "It is the cheese," replied Mr. Lint: THACKERAY, Codlingsby. (Davies)

*cheeta(h), sb.: Anglo-Ind. fr. Hind. chitta, fr. Skt. chitra: the hunting leopard of India, a species of ounce (Felis jubata).

Hist.*, Vol. I. p. 378/2 note. 1870 this graceful creature [an actress], so exquisite in form was mindless and soulless as any beautiful cheetah gamboling under Indian suns: OUIDA, Tricotrin, ch. xviii. p. 480.

*chef, sb.: Fr.: head, chief, esp. head cook, chef de cuisine.

1826 What sort of a genius is your Lordship's chef: LORD BEACONSFIELD, Viv. Grey, Bk. II. ch. ii. p. 27 (1881). 1860 Chef of the bouche of Sir Clavering: THACKERAY, Pendennis, Vol. I. ch. xxii. p. 235 (1879). 1860 [See claqueur]. 1865 pondering on a new flavour for a salmi of woodcocks that he should have tried by his chef the first day of the season: OUIDA, Strathmore, Vol. I. ch. x. p. 168. 1880 its chef had a way of stewing whelks that was considered perfection: J. PAVIN, Confident Agent, ch. xiv. p. 102.

chef d'attaque, phr.: Fr., 'chief of attack': Mus.: leading player in an orchestra, generally the 'first violin', leader of a chorus.

1883 The conductor finds perhaps that his chefs d'attaque...have never been at a single rehearsal: Sat. Rev., Vol. 56, p. 532/2.

chef d'école, phr.: Fr.: leader of a school, founder of a special style of art.

1840 Is this the way in which a chef d'école condescends to send forth a picture to the public? THACKERAY, Misc. Essays, p. 192 (1885). 1854 Your splendid chef d'école, a Rubens or a Horace Vernet, may sit with a secretary reading to him: — Newcomes, Vol. II. ch. i. p. 2 (1879). 1886 We shall need to narrowly examine this reputation of a chef d'école whose powerful influence is felt even now: Athenaeum, Jan. 2, p. 10/2.

*chef d'œuvre, pl. chefs d'œuvre, phr.: Fr.: "A Maister-peece, or Maisters peece; any principall peece of worke, or of workemanship" (Cotgr.).

1619 Sir Henry Saville...makes account to go this next week to Oxford, and there to make up an election at Merton College, as his chef d'œuvre, and last work: J. CHAMBERLAIN, in *Court & Times of Jas. No. 114, p. 429 (1774). 1763 I have neither capacity nor inclination to give a critique on these chef d'œuvres, which, indeed, would take up a whole volume: SKOLLETT, France & Italy, vi. Wks., Vol. v. p. 294 (1817). 1777 great politicians conclude it is a chef d'œuvre of finesse: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VI. p. 482 (1857). 1803 chef d'œuvres of natural or artificial workmanship: Edin. Rev., Vol. 2, p. 231. 1808 the chef-d'œuvre of his plays: SCOTT, Dryden's Wks., Vol. I. p. 357. 1813 Grattan's speech...was a chef d'œuvre: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. II. p. 211 (1832). 1820 several chef d'œuvres of painting and statuary: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. i. p. 16. 1826 This work, the chef d'œuvre of a celebrated artist of Vicenza: LORD BEACONSFIELD, Viv. Grey, Bk. II. ch. iii. p. 36 (1881). bef. 1849 Here, too, are some chef d'œuvres of the unknown great: E. A. POE, Wks., Vol. I. p. 106 (1884). 1854 Then comes an account of the principal dresses, chefs-d'œuvre of Madame Crinoline: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. I. ch. xxxvi. p. 413 (1879).

*chef de cuisine, phr.: Fr., 'chief of the kitchen': head cook.

1860 your fashionable perfumer will no more allow the public to enjoy the pure perfume of the flower than a chef de cuisine will permit you to taste the natural quality of the meat: Once a Week, Dec. 8, p. 666/1. 1865 claimed her by right of ownership, as he claimed his racing stud, his chef de cuisine, his comet wines! OUIDA, Strathmore, Vol. I. ch. xv. p. 243. 1871 The untuned ear of the savage can no more enjoy the tones of civilized music than his palate would relish the elaborate dishes of a French chef de cuisine: SIR S. W. BAKER, Nile Tributaries, ch. viii. p. 139.

1826 Treves had been the chef lieu of a department under the republic...of France: Reft. on a Ramble to Germany, p. 30.

2. a scientific student of the elementary constitution and properties of substances.

1729 The Maid's romantic wish, the Chemist's flame, | And Poet's vision of eternal Fame: POPE, Dunciad, III. 11.

3. a vendor of medicines and drugs.

1748 sent my landlady to a chemist's shop for some cinnamon-water: SMOLLETT, Rob. Ransd., ch. xix. p. 128 (1867).

[The form chemist seems to be a shortening of alchemist (q. v.). The form chymist may be borrowed fr. Fr. chimiste. There is a tendency to call a vendor of drugs, &c., a chemist, and a scientific student a chymist. The spelling chemist best preserves the history of the word in English. The spelling chymist is more correct according to the ultimate derivation. The Arab. kimiya is fr. post-Classical Gk. χημία, which was, as well as ἐχημιον or ἐχημιον (see elixir), originally a name for the substance by which metals could be transmuted (the philosopher's stone), prob. derived fr. χυμός, = 'juice', though some would carry it back to a Coptic word. Gradually however al-kimiya came to be used metonymically for the science, the object of which was the discovery of the philosopher's stone. See Gildemeister (Z D M G, xxx. 534 ff.). The later Gk. forms χημία, χημία are fr. Arab. kimiya.]

chenar, chinor, chinaur, sb.: Anglo-Ind. fr. Pers. chīnār; the Oriental plane (Platanus orientalis).

2. a cheat; in modern times spelt chouse. Gifford's note on the above quotation from Jonson tells us that in 1609 Sir Robert Shirley sent a chiaus, or agent from the Grand Signior and the Sophy, to England, who cheated the Turkish and Persian merchants of £4000, adding that two other chiauses arrived in 1618, 1625. One of the above quotations proves his accuracy as to 1618. Perhaps, however, the particular fraud had little to do with the modern use of the word. As Jonson suggests, chiaus may have been used for 'Turk' in the sense of 'cheat', just as Cataian stood for 'thief' or 'rogue'.

1610 This is the gentleman, and he is no chiause: B. JONSON, Alch., l. 2, Wks., p. 611 (1616). 1679 You'd find your self an arrant Chouse, | If y'were but at a Meeting-House: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. III. Cant. i. p. 65.

\*climax (u  $\perp$ ), sb.: Eng. fr. Lat. climax, fr. Gk. κλίμαξ, 'ladder'.

1. Rhet. an ascending series of expressions arranged in order of effectiveness or importance.

1589 it may aswell be called the clyming figure (as the marching figure), for Clymax is as much to say as a ladder: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., iii. p. 217 (1856). 1678 there seems to be a Climax here, that Solomon's Wisdom did not only excel the Wisdom of the Magi and of the Chaldeans, but also that of the Egyptians themselves: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. 1. ch. iv. p. 311. 1693 Choice between one excellency and another is difficult; and yet the conclusion, by a due climax, is evermore the best: DRYDEN, Tr. Juven., Ded. [T.] 1771 In the climax, to which your correspondent objects, Junius adopts the language of the Court: JUNIUS, Letters, Vol. II. No. xliii. p. 149.

I a. an ascending series generally.

bef. 1733 we rose up to Oates's Plot by a Climax of Aggravatives: R. NORTH, Examen, II. v. 7, p. 319 (1740).

2. the highest point of any gradation, esp. of the rhetorical figure of climax (1), a paragon.

1813 the climax of my eloquence: M. EDGEWORTH, Patronage, Vol. 1. p. 236 (1833). 1847 he: The climax of his age! TENNYSON, Princ., ii. Wks., Vol. IV. p. 39 (1886). 1864 As a climax to his strange proceedings, he added a tower, or belvedere, to his grandfather's old brick house: G. A. SALA, Quite Alone, Vol. 1. ch. iv. p. 64. 1883 there is perhaps a superabundance of climaxes, and a reflection of Beethoven and Schumann: Daily News, Sept. 7, p. 5/4.

clināmen, pl. clināmina, sb.: Lat., 'declinatio': a turning aside from a straight course, a slight inclination. Used by Lucretius to translate the Gk. κλίσις of Epicurus, the slightest conceivable deviation from a straight line, by which Epicurus accounted for the concourse of atoms and the consequent formation of the world.

1684 all his clinamen or deviation of Principles: Tr. Taverneir's Trav., Vol. II. p. 125. 1704 the light and the heavy, the round and the square, would by certain clinamina unite in the notions of atoms and void, as these did in the originals of all things: SWIFT, Tale of a Two, § ix. Wks., p. 83/2 (1686).

clinker ( $\perp$   $\perp$ ), sb.: Eng. fr. Du. klinker.

1. a hard, sun-baked Dutch brick of a light color.

1641 that goodly...river, so curiously wharfed with clincars (MS. clincard brick): EVELYN, Diary, Vol. 1. p. 27 (1872).

I a. See quotations.

1830 Clinkers, bricks impregnated with nitre, and more thoroughly burnt, by being placed next to the fire in the kiln: R. STUART, Dict. Archit. 1841 Burnt and clinkers are such bricks as have been violently burnt, or masses of several bricks run together in the clamp or kiln: GWILT, Archit.

2. a mass of bricks fused together in a kiln.

1841 (See 1 a).

3. a hard fused mass ejected by a volcano, or formed in a furnace or fire.

4. the scale of oxide formed when iron is forged.

clinqant ( $\perp$   $\perp$ , -qu = -k-), adj. and sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. clinqant.

I. adj.: glittering with, or like, precious metal.

1603 With clinqant Rayes their Body's clothed light: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Magnif., p. 66 (1608). 1613 To-day the French, | All clinqant, all in gold, like heathen gods, | Shone down the English: SHAKS., Hen. VIII., i. 1, 19. bef. 1616 A clinqant petticoat of some rich stuff, | To catch the eye: BEAU & FL., Md. in Mill. [T.] 1845 but the clinqant Louis XIV. periwigs act like foils, by contrasting style: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. II. p. 764.

I a. metaph.

2. sb.: tinsel, an alloy formed into leaf like gold-leaf.

bef. 1682 As Coronarium or Clinquant or Brass thinly wrought out into Leaves commonly known among us: SIR TH. BROWN, Tracts, II. p. 29 (1686).

2 a. metaph. tasteless affectation of brilliance in literature or art.

1711 one Verse in Virgil is worth all the Clinquant or Tinsel of Tasso: Spectator, No. 5, Mar. 6, p. 13/1 (Morley).

1771 he avoided the glare and clinqant of his countrymen: HOR. WALPOLE, Vertue's Anecd. Painting, Vol. IV. p. 35. 1781 I am only surprised that, in a country like Peru, where gold and silver thread were so cheap, there was no clinqant introduced into their poetry: — Letters, Vol. VII. p. 490 (1858).

*Clio: Lat. fr. Gk. Κλειώ: name of the muse of Epic poetry and History.

bef. 1629 Of heavenly poems, O Clio, calde by name | In the college of Musis goddesses hystorials: J. SKELTON, Wks., Vol. 1. p. 6 (1843). 1690 Begin, O Clio! and recount from hence | My glorious Sovereigns goodly auncestrey: SPENS., F. Q., III. iii. 4. 1696 Clio, proclaim with golden trump and pen | Her happy days, England's high holidays: PEELE, Anglor. Fer., p. 595/1 (1861). 1887 What is legend but those expressions in concrete form of the universal elements of humanity which Clio stammers over and tries in vain to express? Athenaeum, Dec. 24, p. 856/3.

*clique, sb.: Fr.: a set of persons associated together from mischievous or arrogant motives, a small circle in society.

1832 the head-quarters of a family clique: Edin. Rev., Vol. 56, p. 153. 1845 he lives and eats surrounded by a humble clique: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. II. p. 795. 1881 If there be cliques, there are occasions when clique meets clique: NICHOLSON, From Seward to Skare, xii. 78. 1883 there was a sort of clique formed among the gentlemen: LORD SALTOUN, Scraps, Vol. II. ch. iv. p. 114.

clister, clistre: Eng. fr. Lat. See clyster.

cloāca, pl. cloācae, sb.: Lat., 'a sewer', 'a drain', in Ancient Rome. Anglicised in 19 c. as cloac.

1. a drain or sewer in Ancient Italy; hence, any sewer or drain.

1780 This sweet spark displayed all his little erudition, flourished away upon cloacas and vomitoriums with eternal fluency: BUCKFORD, Italy, Vol. 1. p. 117 (1834). 1793 witness the cloacae, and the catacombs...in the neighbourhood of Rome and Naples: J. MORSE, Amer. Univ. Geogr., Vol. II. p. 424 (1796). 1809 As there was no outlet to these cloaca, nor any cabin boys on board to clean them, you may conceive what balsamic exhalations every now and then filled the boat: MATY, Tr. Ritsbeck's Trav. Germ., Let. xviii. Pinkerton, Vol. VI. p. 64. 1819 every house had its cloaca: BOWDICH, Mission to Ashantee, Pt. II. ch. vi. p. 306. 1820 those vast cloaca or public sewers: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. i. p. 24.

2. metaph. a vehicle or receptacle for anything morally foul.

bef. 1733 the Book was a continual Libel, or rather Cloaca of Libels: R. NORTH, Examen, p. ii. (1740).

3. an intestinal sac or duct terminating in an excretory orifice, into which sac or duct all the visceral excreta are led.

1843 The intestine terminates, as in the reptiles, in a common cloaca: R. OWEN, Lect. Comp. Anat., Introduct. Lect. [L.] 1878 The intestine...ends in a small aboral sac or cloaca: MACALISTER, Invertebr., p. 56.

**Cloāca Maxima*, the principal drain of Ancient Rome, constructed early in the sixth century B.C., a marvel of engineering skill, part of which is still in use; hence, any principal drain, and also, metaph. a main or principal vehicle or receptacle for moral filth.

1845 his ears were the cloaca maxima of offences not to be named to minor auriculars: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. II. p. 674. 1857 one spot where the Cloaca maxima and Port Esquiline of Alerba town...murmurs from beneath a grey stone arch toward the sea, not unfraught with dead rats and cats: C. KINGSLEY, Two Years Ago, p. 47 (1877).

Cloācina, a corrupt spelling of Cluacina, a title of Venus as goddess of purification: incorrectly supposed to be the Roman tutelary goddess of sewers.

**cloisonné*, adj.: Fr., lit. 'partitioned': for application to enamel see quotations.

1877 Cloisonné enamel unites richness of ornament with sharpness of outline: Tr. C. Blanc's Orn. & Dress, p. 260. 1885 Incrusted enamels are of two classes, cloisonné and champlevé. In the former the patterns are delineated by means of strips of metal soldered so as to form the outlines of the metal backing of the piece to be decorated: Athenaeum, Aug. 1, p. 149/a. 1886 This method of setting the precious stones in a raised framework of thin gold wire, soldered on so as to form a kind of cloisonné work, recalls the art of the Gothic goldsmiths: Art Journal, Exhib. Suppl., p. 27/1.

**Clōthō*: Lat. fr. Gk. Κλωθώ, lit. 'the spinner': Class. Mythol.: name of one of the three Fates; depicted in art with a distaff. See Atropos, Lachesis.

1587 Tyl your last thredres gan Clotho to vntwyne: Tottel's Misc., p. 117 (1870). 1591 Parcae, impartial to the highest state, | Too soon you cut what Clotho erst began: GREENE, Maiden's Dream, p. 277/a (1861). 1603 And saw this day mark't white in CLOTHO's booke: B. JONSON, Pt. of King's Entertainment, Wks., p. 849 (1616). 1695 His odious Name Small-Pox, whom when pleas'd CLOTHO saw, | She streight a slender Thread was seen to draw, | Which envious Lachesis soon on the Distaff put; | And Atropos as soon prepar'd with bloody Shears to cut: D'URFVY, Gloriana, ix. p. 15.

**clōture*, sb.: Fr.: closure, termination of a parliamentary debate. The general principle that the majority has power to terminate a debate, was borrowed from abroad, and the term clōture from the French Legislative Assembly. In 1882 clōture seemed likely to be established in English use, but is now replaced by a fresh use of the old closure.

1882 the two-thirds majority limitation of the Clōture proposal: Standard, Dec. 20, p. 5.

clymateriacke: Eng. fr. Fr. See climateric.

1886 Diane de Poitiers [is] in a coa vestis and with a pious posy above her head: Athenaeum, Jan. 9, p. 64/3.

**coach*, coche, sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. coche.

1. any kind of wheeled vehicle for state purposes, or private use, earlier called 'chariot', or 'charet(te)', esp. a closed vehicle with four wheels, originally used by the wealthy; said to have been introduced in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, according to Taylor the Water Poet, by her coachman, in 1564. Taylor says "for indeed a Coach was a strange monster in those dayes, and the sight of them put both horse and man into amazement: some said it was a great Crab-shell brought out of China, and some imagin'd it to be one of the Pagan Temples, in which the Canibals adored the divell: but at last those doubts were cleared, and Coach-making became a substantial Trade" (Wks., sig. Bbb 2 r<sup>o</sup>/1). Southey (Comm. pl. Bk., 1st Ser., p. 431/2, 1849), however, tells us that, according to Fynes Moryson, coaches were rare about 1540, and so Taylor himself, both probably speaking of wheeled vehicles for private use, rather than the special kind to which the above quot. refers. According to Johnson a coach is "distinguished from a chariot by having seats fronting each other". Hackney-coaches which plied for hire, introduced about the middle of 17 c., were the forerunners of the modern four-wheeled cab.

1567 they cannot without a very great forfeit ride in coaches or chariots...but are constrained...to walk a-foot in the streets: JEWELL, Def., Lett., &c., p. 643 (1890). 1575 She was the first that did invent | In coaches brave to ride: In Peele's Wks., p. 373 (1861). 1580 she beckend her hand for me: I cam to her coach side: DEE, Diary, p. 9 (Camd. [The derivation of Fr. coche directly fr. Lat. concha is unsatisfactory owing to coche being masc. It may be that an early coche (fem.), = 'boat', has become confused with coche (masc.), = 'coach', fr. It. coccio (so Diez), or else the word coche is directly fr. a Celtic form akin to Cornish coc, and Welsh cwch. Cognate masc. forms are Gk. kóynos, = 'cockle-shell', Skt. çankha, = 'conch-shell'. The It. coccio is either a masc. dim. fr. fem. cocca, fr. Lat. concha (so Diez), or fr. Hungarian kotsi (see quot. fr. Peacham, 1622).]

2. a flattering speech or act, a commendation.

1609 I urge not this to insinuate my desert, | Or supple your tried temper with soft phrases; | True friendship loathes such oily compliment: B. JONSON, Case is All, i. 2, Wks., p. 506/2 (1860). 1671 To sit and hear | So many hollow compliments and lies: MILTON, P. R., iv. 124. 1679 you have imported French goods, I mean Compliments, they are a Nation full of Complimenters: SHADWELL, True Widow, ii. p. 23. 1715 But Rafaele has made his beloved Dante still a greater Complement: RICHARDSON, Theor. Painting, p. 74. 1768 I have always observed, when there is as much sour as sweet in a compliment, that an Englishman is eternally at a loss within himself whether to take it or let it alone: STERNE, Sentiment. Journ., Wks., p. 401 (1839). 1815 She was extremely gratified at such a compliment: J. AUSTEN, Emma, Vol. III. ch. vi. p. 316 (1833).

3. a present, a gratuity. Only used in Scotland. [C.] In the quot. compliment is a modern change from complement (Ed. 1640), = 'accessory'.

[1616 you must furnish me with compliments, | To the manner of Spain; my coach, my guardaduennas: B. JONSON, Dev. is an Ass, iii. 1, Wks., p. 360/1 (1860).]

complot (ˌkɒplɒt), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. complot, = 'a conspiracy', 'a plot'. In Shakspeare the accent is variable.

1. a conspiracy, a plot, intrigue, a preconceived plan of action.

NORTH, Examen, i. iii. 8, p. 128 (1740).

2. the scheme or subject (of a literary composition). Rare.

1651 a Sonnet...whereof the complot...had as much of the Hermit as of the Poet: Reliq. Wotton, p. 165 (1685).

[The derivation of Fr. complot is doubtful; according to Diez, fr. Lat. complicitum. The Eng. word plot, = 'conspiracy', has been regarded as an abbrev. fr. complot, but is found 1579 in Fenton's Guiciardini, a few years earlier than the earliest Eng. use of complot hitherto recorded in a dictionary. The Eng. plot, = 'a patch of ground', came to mean 'plan' (cf. Cotgr., Plateforme). The change of meaning of Eng. plot from 'ground-plan' to 'scheme' is exactly analogous to the change in Eng. of plan from "ground-plat of a building" (Cotgr.) to 'scheme'. It seems therefore a mistake to separate plot, = 'conspiracy', from Eng. plot, plat, = 'plan'.]

compluvium, pl. compluvia, sb.: Lat.: a quadrangular opening in the middle of the roof of the atrium in a Roman house, towards which the roof sloped on each side, so that the rain which fell on the roof flowed into a tank called impluvium, beneath the opening.

1885 He must come down the chimney or through the compluvium opening in the roof: Athenaeum, Aug. 22, p. 244/2.

comply (ˌkɒmplaɪ), vb.: Eng., prob. fr. It. compiire, = 'to fulfil', 'to use compliments', 'to suit'.

1. trans. to fulfil.

bef. 1634 my power cannot comply my promise: CHAPMAN, Revenge for Hon. [Nares]

2. intr. (often used with prep. with) to accord, to be complacent, to yield out of sympathy or forbearance, to conform, to agree, to be formally courteous.

1602 [See complement 1.]. 1604 Your hands, come then: the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony: let me comply with you in this garb: SHAKS., Ham., ii. 2, 390. 1671 Yet this be sure, in nothing to comply | Scandalous or forbidden in our law: MILTON, Sams. Agon., 1408. 1679 He that complies against his will, | Is of his own opinion still: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. III. Cant. III. p. 380 (1860). bef. 1694 The truth of things will not comply with our conceits, and bend itself to our interest: TYLLOTSON. [J.]

[In the subjoined quot. comply seems to be a distinct word, fr. Lat. complicare, = 'fold up', supposed by Herrick to have the sense of complecti, = 'to embrace'. 1648 Witty Ovid by | Whom faire Corinna sits, and doth comply | With yvorie wrists his laureat head: HERRICK, Hesp., p. 221. (Davies)]

*compos mentis, phr.: Lat.: having control over one's mind, of sound mind, in such possession of one's mental faculties as to be able to transact legal or other business. See non compos mentis.

*coryphaeus, pl. coryphaei, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. κορυφαίος, = 'the leader of a Greek chorus'. Anglicised in 17 c. as coryphe(e).

1. the leader of a chorus, metaph. a leader generally.

1611 Your Coryphe, great Coryate, | The Corybant of Odcombe: L. WHITAKER, in Coryat's Crambe, sig. b 2 v. 1633 But now they call him [Peter] the coryphe of the Apostles, the prince of their souls, the porter of paradise: T. ADAMS, Com. a Pet., Sherman Comm., p. 598/2 (1865). 1654—6 I heard the defamation of many...of his complices and Coryphaei, spies set a-work by him to defame and bespattle me: J. TRAPP, Comm., Vol. III. p. 491/1 (1868). 1676 the Coryphaeus of all those thieves: J. SMITH, Christ. Relig. Appeal, Bk. II. ch. v. § 5, p. 49. 1678 [See chorus]. bef. 1716 that noted Coryphaeus of the Independent Faction: SOUTH, Serm., Vol. v. p. 45 (1727). 1787 On the Coryphaeus it depended that the tone should be given, and that the chorus altogether should sympathize: Gent. Mag., 1793/2. 1803 the triumphant air of party...is better suited to the coryphaeus of a mob, than to a writer of history: Edin. Rev., Vol. 2, p. 181. 1819 Constantine was the Coryphaeus in every invective, as well as the leader in every altercation: T. HOPE, Anast., Vol. II. ch. x. p. 207 (1829). 1828 "Oh, very well," replied the Coryphaeus of Cheltenham, swinging his Woodstock glove to and fro: LORD LYTTON, Pelham, ch. xl. p. 114 (1859). 1845 a confidential friend is placed on the saguan or porch to whom the Coryphaeus of each arriving party unmask and gives the number: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. I. p. 484. 1882—3 [Latimer's] practical and bold advocacy of the principles of the Reformation made him one of the coryphaei of that movement: SCHAFF-HERZOG, Encyc. Relig. Knowl., Vol. II. p. 1281/2.

2. in the University of Oxford, the assistant of the choragus (q. v.), also called the praecentor.

1883 As Coryphaeus of the University and as successor of Eton he was well known: Guardian, Mar. 21, p. 416.

*coryphée, sb.: Fr., 'coryphaeus': ballet-dancer. This meaning is not given in French dictionaries, and the Fr. gender is masc. The Eng. use is owing to the leading dancer in a ballet having been formerly often a man, e.g. Vestris, father and son.

1882 the grand fairy ballet by the Alhambra coryphées, with Mdles. Lillie Lee and Von Rokoy as nimble and graceful principal dancers: Standard, Dec. 27, p. 2. 1888 those wonderful drawings of coryphées with their gauze dresses aglitter with spangles: Academy, Nov. 3, p. 294/2.

coup d'essai, phr.: Fr.: stroke of trial, a trial-piece, a piece of work serving for experiment or practice.

1712 I have a Design this Spring to make...and have already begun with a Coup d'essai upon the Sleeves: Spectator, No. 319, Mar. 6, p. 460/1 (Morley). 1748 he had perused my play, which he thought, on the whole, was the best coup d'essai he had ever seen: SMOLLETT, Rod. Rand., ch. lxiii. Wks., Vol. I. p. 444 (1817). 1787 The Cupola is said to have been his coup d'essai before he attempted that of the Duomo: P. BECKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. I. p. 137 (1805). 1807 It is a pleasing circumstance for an unpractised writer to be able, for his coup d'essai, to correct a historian of such eminence as Mr. Gibbon: Edin. Rev., Vol. 9, p. 300. 1831 but this coup d'essai was sufficiently ambitious: ib., Vol. 54, p. 466. 1845 This work seems...to be a respectable coup d'essai, written with some thought: J. W. CROKER, Essays Fr. Rev., I. p. 6 (1857).

*coup d'état, phr.: Fr.: stroke of state, piece of high policy, violent political measure; esp. one in which opposition is repressed by military force.

1646 These were the two first Coups d'état, strokes of State that he made: HOWELL, Lewis XIII., p. 157. 1849 Now, see a coup d'état that saves all:

LORD BEACONSFIELD, Tancred, Bk. IV. ch. iii. p. 263 (1881). 1852 The Directory, hitherto, has not been very pacifically inclined, but having struck what is called a coup d'état, they at length saw the necessity of obtaining absolution from the discontented by giving peace to France: Tr. Bourrienné's Mem. N. Bonaparte, ch. vi. p. 70. 1877 Echo, Nov. 26. [St.]

*coup d'œil, phr.: Fr., 'stroke of eye': glance, view taken in at a glance, the effect produced by a scene at the first glance.

1739 All this you have at one coup d'œil in entering the garden, which is truly great: GRAV, Letters, No. xxi. Vol. I. p. 43 (1819). 1749 they content themselves with the first coup d'œil: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. I. No. 143, p. 362 (1774). 1773 Nuneham astonished me with the first coup d'œil of its ugliness: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. v. p. 489 (1857). 1787 One of the most pleasing *coup d'œil*s I ever remember was the ball at court, the last day of the carnival: P. BECKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. I. p. 85 (1805). 1810 such beautiful engravings and ingenious charts and coups d'œil of information: Edin. Rev., Vol. 17, p. 169. 1813 The first coup d'œil decided the fate of all who appeared: M. EDGEWORTH, Patronage, Vol. II. p. 115 (1832). 1818 brings within the compass of a coup d'œil some of the noblest public edifices and spacious streets to be found in the most leading cities of Europe: LADY MORGAN, Fl. Macarthy, Vol. I. ch. i. p. 46 (1819). 1834 The coup d'œil of the Louvre is very magnificent: Edin. Rev., Vol. 59, p. 73. 1839 The entrance to the Black Sea...is the grandest coup d'œil on the Bosphorus: MISS PARDOE, Beauties of the Bosph., p. 84. 1848 The coup d'œil of the Brussels opera-house did not strike Mrs. O'Dowd as being so fine as the theatre in Fishamble Street, Dublin: THACKERAY, Van. Fair, Vol. I. ch. xxix. p. 304 (1879). 1852 with that coup d'œil which seldom deceived him, he ordered a new battery to be constructed: Tr. Bourrienné's Mem. N. Bonaparte, ch. xiv. p. 180. 1871 The coup d'œil was beautiful, as the camel entered the enclosure with the shaggy head and massive paws of the dead lion hanging upon one flank: SIR S. W. BAKER, Nile Tributaries, ch. x. p. 131 (1884). 1876 it was, indeed, a charming coup d'œil: Times, May 15. [St.]

coup de baguette, phr.: Fr.: stroke with a wand or light stick.

1761 this may come round again, like a coup de baguette, when one least expects it: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. III. p. 457 (1857). 1781 I shall like with your leave to print your alterations hereafter, for I think them, as I said, performed by a coup de baguette: ib., Vol. VIII. p. 36 (1858).

coup de bâton, phr.: Fr.: stroke with a stick or rod.

1773 was rewarded for his impudence with a volley of coups de bâton: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. v. p. 507 (1857).

*coup de main, phr.: Fr., 'stroke of hand': a sudden and resolute assault.

1768 Coup de main and Manoeuvre might be excusable in Marshal Saxe as he was in the service of France, but we cannot see what apology can be made for our officers lugging them in by head and shoulders: Ann. Reg., I. Humble Remonstrance, &c., p. 373/2. 1763 a certain impetuosity which makes them fitter for a coup de main: FATHER CHARLEVOIX, Act. Voy. Canada, p. 104. 1772 As if an appeal to the public were no more than a military coup de main, where a brave man has no rules to follow, but the dictates of his courage: JUNIUS, Letters, Vol. I. No. iii. p. 25. 1792 and he has little hope unless from a coup de main, before the armies of the enemy are collected: Amer. State Papers,

For. Relat., Vol. i. p. 330 (1832). 1799 It appears more like a line of march than a body intended for a coup de main, as there are with it bullocks and baggage of different kinds: WELLINGTON, Disp., Vol. i. p. 25 (1844). 1803 Should force be necessary, Governor Claiborne and General Wilkinson would have to decide on the practicability of a coup de main, without waiting for reinforcements: Amer. State Papers, Vol. II. p. 572 (1832). 1813 Passion always conquers art at a coup de main: M. EDGEWORTH, Patronage, Vol. II. p. 129 (1833). 1819 It is only when the commander of the whole nation purposes some definite expedition or coup-de-main of great importance and short duration, that all the lesser Schaiachs and their vassals close in round his standard: T. HOPE, Anast., Vol. III. ch. viii. p. 210 (1820). 1840 The Koords of Amadia were so appalled by this coup-de-main, that it was supposed they would give up the place without any more fighting: FRASER, Koordistan, &c., Vol. I. Let. III. p. 76. 1844 The idea of advancing upon Gembloux, and of capturing Brussels by a coup de main: W. SIBORNE, Waterloo, Vol. I. ch. v. p. 96.

**coup de maitre*, phr.: Fr.: master-piece.

1718 I have made a coup de maitre upon my mother, in persuading her to pass a month or two at Stanton Harcourt, in order to facilitate my journeys to her: POPE, Wks., Vol. VIII. p. 323 (1872). bef. 1753 this coup de Maitre of a Dissolution: R. NORTH, Examen, I. II. 135. p. 105 (1740). 1771 crown me with oak, or ivy...or what you will, and acknowledge this to be a coup de maitre in the way of waggery: SMOLLETT, Humph. Cl., p. 107½ (1882).

coup de pied, phr.: Fr.: 'stroke of foot': a kick, a step in dancing.

*Czar, czar, sb.: Eng. fr. Russ. tsare, = 'king', 'emperor' (esp. of Byzantine empire), 'sultan'. First assumed in dealings with foreigners by Ivan III., bef. 1505, and adopted as the specific title of royalty by Ivan IV., 1547. Though czar is ultimately derived fr. Caesar, the title did not at first convey the idea of imperial dignity. Ivan III., however, assumed it in connexion with his claim to be the successor of the Byzantine emperors. The word tsare was imported into the Russian language long before 1500, but was not applied to native sovereigns.

1555 Note therefore that Czar in the Ruthens tounge signifieth a kynge, whereas in the language of the Slauns, Pollons, Bohemes, and other, the same woorde Czar, signifieth Cesar by which name Th[e] emperours haue byn commonly cauled. For bothe they and the Slauns that are vnder the kyngdome of Hungarie, caule a kynge by an other name: as sum Crail, other Kyrail, and sum Koroll: but thinke that only an Emperoure is cauled Czar. Whereby it came to see that the Ruthene or Muscouite interpreters hearynge theyr prince to bee cauled of strange nations, began them selues also to name hym an Emperour, and thinke the name Czar to bee more worthy then the name of a kynge, although they signifie all one thyng. But who so wyl reade all theyr hystories and bookes of holy scripture, shall fynde that a kynge is cauled Czar, and an Emperour Kessar. By the lyke erroure Th[e] emperour of the Turkes is cauled Czar, who neuertheles of antiquitie vsed no hygher tytle then the name of a kynge, expressed by this woorde Czar. And herof the Turkes of Europe that vse the Slaun tounge, caule the cite of Constantinople Czargrad, (that is) the kynges cite: R. EDEN, Decades, Sect. iv. p. 319 (1835). 1698 call himselfe the Monarch or Czar of all Russia: R. HAKLVT, Voyages, Vol. I. p. 223. — by his princely state hee is called Otesara, as his predecessors haue bene before, which to interpret, is a king, that giueth not tribute to any man. *data, sb. pl.: Lat., pl. of datum (g.v.): facts, proofs, or arguments granted, upon which reasoning can be based; items of available information upon a subject.

1740 This then may, I think, be numbered among what the mathematicians called data; that is, confessed and granted truths: DELANY, David, i. 81. [T.] 1767 I have neither data nor postulata enough to reason upon: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 186, p. 521 (1774). 1776 the author begs leave to assure the connoisseurs that he has not proceeded in his enquiries without sufficient data: J. COLLIER, Mus. Trav., p. vii. 1803 all our data must be obtained from our own mental operations: STEWART, Life of T. Reid, Wks., p. 101 (1846). 1806 He cast a quick and penetrating glance over the facts and the data that were presented to him: JEFFREYS, Essays, Vol. i. p. 141 (1844). 1809 Some of these data on which the lists which make the population of Austria amount to twenty-seven millions are founded, are truly ridiculous: MATY, Tr. Riesbeck's Trav. Germ., Let. XXXV. Pinkerton, Vol. VI. p. 124. 1818 To a mind so quick in its perceptions, so energetic in all its workings, slight data were sufficient to lead to a just result: LADY MORGAN, Fl. Macarthy, Vol. IV. ch. i. p. 9 (1816). 1821—2 The above was only one instance of his building too much on practical data: HAZLITT, Table-Talk, p. 77 (1885). 1826 in civilized countries, where experience has recorded many valuable data: CAPT. HEAD, Panopae, p. 274. 1843 All science consists of data and conclusions from those data, of proofs and what they prove: J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. I. p. 9 (1856). 1845 he has suggested that the comparison of the respective weights (if there were sufficient data) of an equal number of the largest herbivorous quadrupeds of each country would be extremely curious: C. DARWIN, Journ. Beagle, ch. v. p. 87. 1865 With a million novel data | About the articulation, | And facts that strip off all husks | From the history of molluscs: O. W. HOLMES, Farewell to Agassiz, Poems, p. 295/1 (1882). 1885 many curious data concerning a Roman garrison at Greta Bridge: Athenaeum, Aug. 29, p. 270/1.

*début, sb.: Fr.: first cast, first appearance, entry upon any public vocation.

1751 I find that your début at Paris has been a good one: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II, No. 18, p. 76 (1774). 1768 the winter keeps up to the vivacity of its début: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. IV, p. 123 (1857). 1807 the manner in which you make your début in the wholly unstudied part of striking a light for yourself: BERSFORD, Miseries, Vol. II, p. 250 (5th Ed.). 1808 We may begin with Mrs. Mason's début in the Glen: Edin. Rev., Vol. 19, p. 403. 1813 The début of his [Grattan's] predecessor, Flood, had been a complete failure: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. II, p. 211 (1832). 1818 And my début in Paris, I blush to think on it! Must now, DOLL, be made in a hideous low bonnet: T. MOORE, Rudge Family, p. 9. 1829 I was a little disappointed in her début, and much interested in her success: LORD BRACONFIELD, Young Duke, Bk. III, ch. viii. p. 162 (1881). 1842 It was under this gentleman that Morgiana made her début in public life: THACKERAY, Miscellanies, Vol. IV, p. 195. 1845 The first publication... will appear to an English reader an odd début for a politician and historian of such eminence: J. W. CROKER, Essays Fr. Rev., I, p. 8 (1857). 1878 five Nubian lions are announced as about to make their début in a startling and novel way: Lloyd's Weekly, May 19, p. 712. [St.] 1881 One sees the animals driven in at one end of a tubular arrangement to make a début at the other in the form of a sausage, ham or side of bacon: NICHOLSON, From Sword to Sharp, II, 10.

*débutant, fem. débutante, sb.: Fr.: one who makes a first appearance (esp. as actor, actress, or public performer).

1821—2 I was generally sent out of the way when any débutant had a friend at court, and was to be unduly handled: HAZLITT, Table-Talk, p. 413 (1885). 1828 considering that allowances would be made for the timidity of a débutant, I strolled leisurely up the hill: Harrobian, p. 47. 1848 and Eaves was certain that the unfortunate débutante in question was no other than Mrs. Rawdon Crawley: THACKERAY, Van. Fair, Vol. II, ch. xxix. p. 326 (1879). 1876 The débutante, Mlle. Camille (Emma Marigold), showed very great promise in an insignificant part: Echo, Sept. 14. [St.] 1877 His eyes turned admiringly to the faultless loveliness of the new débutante again: RITA, Vivienne, Bk. II, ch. ii. 1885 The débutante has certainly enjoyed excellent tuition: Athenaeum, Oct. 24, p. 544/2.

*decade (Δ -), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. décade: ten consecutive numbers, the number ten, a period of ten days or ten months or ten years, a group or series of ten.

1555 R. EDEN, Decades, Title. 1611 Decade. A Decade; the tearme, or number of tenne yeares, or moneths; also, a tenth, or, the number of tenne: COTGR. 1676 because it was the only number within the Decad, which was neither Generated, nor did it self Generate: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. I, ch. iv. p. 393. bef. 1744 All rank'd by ten; whole decades, when they dine, | Must slave a Trojan slave to pour the wine: POPE. [J.]

décadent, sb.: Fr.: one who holds that the age is in a state of decadence, one with a self-imposed mission to regenerate the age; also, attrib. Hence, décadentisme, the theory and practice of the above.

1886 I shall speak to you some other time about the décadents and the décadentisme, a malady of the hour, fashionable, like the visit to the watering-places: Athenaeum, July 24, p. 117/1. 1887 The décadent school, under the pretext of symbolism, ... of "rare impressions," applies its resources to writing unintelligibly: ib., Jan. 1, p. 10/3.

*decameron, sb.: fr. the title of Boccaccio's celebrated collection of Italian tales which are, amongst other things, distinguished for striking variety: a remarkable variety. Perhaps only used in the passage quoted.

1609 such a decameron of sports...Boccace neuer thought of the like: B. JONSON, Sil. Wom., I, 3, Wks., p. 536 (1616).

[The It. Decameron means a record of ten days' events, coined fr. Gk. δέκα, and αἰῆρα (Doric for ἡμέρα), = 'a day', cf. Gk. adj. δεκάημερος, or fr. δέκα, and μέρος, = 'a part'.]

decāni, sb.: Lat., gen. of decānus, = 'dean': often used attrib. in the phr. decani-side. See cantoris.

decastichon, sb.: quasi-Gk. δεκάστιχον: a stanza or poem of ten verses. Anglicised as decastich.

1601 this Decastichon: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 31, ch. 2, Vol. II, p. 402.

decasyllabon, sb.: quasi-Gk. δεκασύλλαβον: a verse of ten syllables.

1589 the spacious volubilitie of a drumming decasyllabon: NASHE, in Greene's Menaphon, p. 6 (1880).

December, sb.: Lat.: name of the twelfth (originally the tenth) month of the year.

1600 men are April when they woo, December when they wed: SHAKS., As You Like It, IV, 1, 148.

decemvir, pl. decemviri, sb.: Lat.: one of a commission of ten men, esp. a commission for legislating, who were absolute rulers of Rome B.C. 451—449.

1579 this law of the Decemviri, which the Tribunes did preferre: NORTH, Tr. Plutarch, p. 864 (1612). 1590 the Romanes had altered their government from Kings to Consuls, from Consuls to Dictators, from Dictators to Decemviri, which Decemviri continued not long, and then againe to Consuls: L. LLOYD, Consent of Time, p. 502. 1600 there should be created Decemvirs...the Decemviri: HOLLAND, Tr. Livy, Bk. III, p. 100. 1622 I had much adowe with Zanzabars deservery: R. COCKS, Diary, Vol. I, p. 30 (1883). 1625 The Lawes also of the Roman Kings, and of the Decemviri: PURCHAS, Pilgrims, Vol. I, Bk. i, p. 105.

décence, sb.: Fr.: propriety, comeliness.

1836 To the opera to see Taglioni dance... Her grace and décence are something that no one can imagine who has not seen her: H. GREVILLE, Diary, p. 94.

decennium, sb.: Late Lat.: a period of ten years.

1837 These are the only monuments of early typography acknowledged to come within the present decennium: HALLAM, Introd. Lit. Europe, Pt. I, ch. iii, § 25. [L.]

dēceptio visūs, phr.: Late Lat.: a deceiving of the sight, an optical illusion.

1599 methinks you should say it were some enchantment, dēceptio visūs, or so: B. JONSON, Ev. Man out of his Hum., v. 7, Wks., p. 67/2 (1860). 1612 For the Corps Sir...there's no bodie, nothing. A meere blandation, a dēceptio visūs: CHAPMAN, Widowes T., v. Wks., Vol. III, p. 80 (1873). 1634 But it may be objected, this is but dēceptio visūs: W. DODD, New England's Prospe., p. 82. abt. 1645 Whereas you please to magnifie some pieces of mine, and that you seem to spie the Muses searching upon my Trees, I fear 'tis but dēceptio visūs, for they are but Satyrs: HOWELL, Epist. Ho-El., Vol. II, lxix, p. 381 (1678). 1665 Jannes and Jambres who...by a dēceptio visūs or diabolical enchantments imitated Moses: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 224 (1677).

*déchéance, sb.: Fr.: forfeiture, fall.

1835 This revival of their hopes sufficiently accounts for the violence with which Robespierre and his friends urged the déchéance of the king in the Jacobins, in the Assembly, and even on the Champ de Mars: J. W. CROKER, Essays Fr. Rev., VI, p. 332 (1857). 1870 It was not the déchéance of Napoleon that was proclaimed on the 4th of September [1870], but the déchéance of militarism: F. HARRISON, in Fortnightly Rev., New Ser., VIII, 647.

déchirant, adj.: Fr.: rending, heart-rending.

1810 there is something truly déchirant in the natural and piteous iteration of her eloquent complainings: JEFFREY, Essays, Vol. I, p. 252 (1844).

déchu, part.: Fr.: fallen.

1870 Not only Napoleonism and militarism are déchus henceforth in France, but something else; and that is, the indolent extravagance of the rich: F. HARRISON, in Fortnightly Rev., New Ser., VIII, 648.

decimator (Δ - Δ -), sb.: Eng., as if noun of agent to Lat. decimāre, = 'to select every tenth man of a number of men for death'; Late Lat., 'to take tithes': one who decimates.

BLAQUIERE, Tr. Sig. Pananti, p. 191 (2nd Ed.).

*Dieu et mon droit, phr.: Fr.: God and my right; motto on the scroll below the royal arms of Great Britain and Ireland.

1664-6 howbeit, we have not done the same, but Dieu et mon droit, God and our right by us: J. TRAPP, Com. Old Test., Vol. I. p. 350/2 (1867).

Dieu garde, phr.: Fr., 'God guard', '(so) God help': a formula of oath-taking.

abt. 1520 Calisto & Melibæa, in Dodsley-Hazlitt's Old Plays, Vol. I. p. 56 (1876). bef. 1656 His master Harding could not produce so much as a probability of any vow anciently required or undertaken, whether by beck or Dieu-gard: BR. HALL, Wks., IX. 278. [Davies]

*differentia, sb.: Lat.: a difference; a characteristic which constitutes an essential distinction between one species and another, or one individual and another; a quality or property essential to exact scientific definition and classification.

1843 which characteristics would of course be so many differentia for the definition of the power itself: J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. I. p. 159 (1856). 1883 M. Bourne's [book] has at least a certain differentia of its own: Sat. Rev., Vol. 56, p. 584/1. 1885 A tabular summary...gives the differentia of the chief meteorological elements in each month: Athenæum, Aug. 29, p. 273/3.

digamma, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. δῖγαμμα: the double gamma, the sixth letter of the old Doric and Æolic Greek alphabets, so named from its shape, F. It answered to the Heb. פ, and the Lat. consonantal u, and was probably pronounced something like an Eng. w. As a numeral, the digamma, in a modified form, had the value of six.

1699 the little use of his new invented Letter the Digamma, which he instituted or borrowed from the Eolique to express V Consonant: M. LISTER, Journal, to Paris, p. 50. 1729 While tow'ring o'er your Alphabet, like Saul, | Stands our Digamma, and o'er-tops them all: POPE, Dunciad, iv. 218 (1757). 1820 The Boustrophedon mode of writing, and the Digamma, which it appears to contain, are additional proofs of its high antiquity: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. xii. p. 369. 1885 The most curious thing of all... is the existence of a gamma under circumstances which are at once suggestive of the old digamma in real life: Athenaeum, July 11, p. 481/2.

digitalis, sb.: Lat., 'belonging to the finger'.

1. Bot. name of a genus of plants, Nat. Order Scrophulariaceae, of which the Foxglove, Digitalis purpurea, is a common English species.

1664 Remove Seedling Digitalis: EVELYN, Kal. Hort., p. 217 (1729).

2. Pharm. powdered leaves or extract of Digitalis purpurea and other kindred species, a medicine and a poison.

1860 Mrs. B. had recently put him through a searching course of digitalis: Once a Week, Apr. 14, p. 343/2.

digito monstrari, phr.: Lat.: to be pointed out by the finger, to be distinguished (Hor., Od., 4, 3, 22).

1819 Even were that event to happen, I am not ambitious of the honoured distinction, digito monstrari: SCOTT, Bride of Lammermoor, ch. i. Wks., Vol. I. p. 966/1 (1857). 1865 You will want the triumph of the monstrari digito, and the guidance of the helm through stormy waters: OUIDA, Strathmore, Vol. I. ch. v. p. 73.

*dignus vindice nōdus, phr.: Lat.: a complication (knot) worthy of a (divine) deliverer. See Hor., A. P., 191, where he deprecates the introduction of a deus ex machina in a drama, unless it is indispensable to the plot.

bef. 1733 Here was dignus vindice nōdus: R. NORTH, Examen, III. vi. 51, p. 460 (1740). 1749 The former is steady and unshaken, where the nōdus is dignus vindice; the latter is oftener improperly than properly exerted, but always brutally: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. I. No. 175, p. 521 (1774). 1750 or perhaps it may not be dignus vindice nōdus, and the present security of Jones may be accounted for by natural means: FIELDING, Tom Jones, Bk. IX. ch. v. Wks., Vol. VI. p. 541 (1806). 1765 HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. IV. p. 333 (1857). 1779 I cannot conveniently wait on you to-morrow morning, but will if it be a dignus nōdus: In J. H. JESSE'S Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. IV. p. 345 (1882). 1817 but this dignus vindice nōdus has proved equally intractable by crystallographical distinctions: Edin. Rev., Vol. 28, p. 189.

digue, sb.: Fr.: bank, jetty.

1670 There is a digue leading into it from the Land: R. LASSELS, Voy. Ital., Pt. II. p. 171 (1698). 1886 There are several good figures of girls gossiping on the digue of stone which defends the place against the sea: Athenaeum, May 22, p. 686/1.

dii majōres, phr.: Lat.: the greater gods; hence, metaph. men of the first rank of merit.

1889 One by one the Dii majores are leaving us: Carlyle, George Eliot, Matthew Arnold; and now Robert Browning... has passed into silence: Athenaeum, Dec. 21, p. 858/1.

*dii minōres, phr.: Lat.: the lesser gods; hence, metaph. men of the second rank of merit.

1882 There is a great gap between him and the dii minores, able young men, the promising titulataurs of the future: Athenaeum, Dec. 30, p. 886. 1888 She has taken her place among the dii minores of the book world: Academy, Nov. 3, p. 283/3.

dii ōmen āvertant, phr.: Lat.: may the gods avert the omen.

1885 Why should the minister of Ruthwell call it the "Proposed Restoration of the Runic Monument"? Dii ōmen āvertant: Athenaeum, Dec. 19, p. 814/2.

dii Penātes, phr.: Lat.: guardian gods of the household; hence, home. See Penates.

1772 I am just arrived, as well as yourself, at my dii penates, but with very different intention: GIBBON, Life & Lett., p. 223 (1869). 1819 with wives and children and Dii Penates: HANS BUSK, Vestriad, iii. 568.

dii tūtēlāres, phr.: Lat.: guardian (tutelary) gods.

1882 With the Dii Tutelares of cities and countries: SHORTHOUSE, Yohn Inglesant, Vol. I. ch. ii. p. 37 (2nd Ed.).

dīambus, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. δίαμβος: a double iambus, an iambic dipody, — — —.

dīs aliter visum, phr.: Lat.: it seemed good to the gods (that it should be) otherwise. Virg. Aen., 2, 428.

1803 MACDONNELL, Dict. Quot.

dilapidator (= — — —), sb.: Eng., as if Lat. noun of agent to dilapidare, = 'to cause decay' (of buildings, &c.): one who causes dilapidations, one who neglects proper repairs.

1711 The late bishop, a monstrous dilapidator of that see: STYVE, Life of Parker. [C. E. D.]

dilecta dēlicta, phr.: Late Lat.: beloved sins.

1656 So when God strikes a parting blow between us and our dilecta dēlicta, or right hand sins, let us see a mercy in it and be thankful: J. TRAPP, Com. New Test., p. 68/1 (1868).

*dilemma, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. δίλημμα, = 'a double catch'.

1. Log. and Rhet. a double proposition, an argument in which an adversary is caught between two alternative difficulties. Such an argument was likened to a fork or a pair of horns.

1552 Dilemma, otherwise complexio, vel cornutus Syllogismus, called a horned argument, is when the reason consisteth of repugnant members, so that whatsoever you graunt, you fall into the snare, and take the foyle: T. WILSON, Rule of Reas., fol. 34<sup>vo</sup> (1567). 1588 Thus was the poore manne perplexed with a doubtfull dilemma: GREENE, Pandosto, Wks., p. 48 (1861). 1589 the dilemma of the Logicians: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., III. p. 230 (1869). 1602 the scrupulous catholikes perplexed with many dilemmas betwixt religion and loyaltie: W. WATSON, Quodlibets of Relig. & State, p. 264. 1641 repair the acheloian horn of your dilemma how you can, against the next push: MILTON, Animadv., Wks., Vol. I. p. 173 (1806). 1654 that swound at a Syllogisme, purge both wayes at a Dilemma and are ready to make their own Testament: R. WHITLOCK, Zootomia, p. 162. 1665 so equivocal is the word Erythraume, that I cannot refrain the giving you a glance thereof, to the end you may the better help in this dilemma: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 107 (1677). bef. 1670 Now here's a forked Dilemma: J. HACKET, Abp. Williams, Pt. II. 125, p. 132 (1693). 1877 various famous dilemmas: Sat. Rev., Nov. 24, p. 661/2. [St.]

2. metaph. a difficult and perplexing situation, an awkward predicament.

1598 in perplexity and doubtful dilemma: SHAKS., Merry Wives, iv. 5, 87. 1617 Blood follows blood through forty generations, | And I've a slow-pac'd wrath—a shrewd dilemma! MIDDLETON, Fair Quar., II. 1. Wks., Vol. IV. p. 185 (1885). 1649 A dilemma put upon the Parliament either to try or not to try John Lillburne: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 53 (1850). bef. 1667 Whom Good or Ill does equally confound, | And both the Horns of Fate's Dilemma wound: COWLEY, Wks., Vol. I. p. 122 (1707). 1674 this way of taking [when a pawn has attacked two pieces at once] is called a Fork or Dilemma: Compl. Gamester, p. 71. bef. 1739 Or which must end me a Fool's wrath or love? A dire dilemma! either way I'm sped: POPE, Prolog. to Satires, 31, Wks., Vol. IV. p. 12 (1757). 1751 the House and its honour grew outrageous at the dilemma they were got into: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. II. p. 240 (1857). 1776 This dilemma, however, was at an end: J. COLLIER, Mus. Trav., Ded., p. ii. 1814 I am in, what the learned call a dilemma, and the vulgar, a scrape: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. III. p. 41 (1832). 1820 in this dilemma we made a virtue of necessity: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. ii. p. 39. 1830 he made every possible exertion to extricate us from the appalling dilemma with which we were now threatened: E. BLAQUIERE, Tr. Sig. Pananti, p. 66 (2nd Ed.). 1886 The eternal dilemmas of social compromise: F. HARRISON, Choice of Books, p. 56.

*dilettante, pl. dilettanti, sb.: It.: a lover (of art), an amateur (of art), one who takes an unprofessional interest in art. The word has gradually degenerated so as often to mean a trifling pretender to knowledge of art, literature, or science. Also, attrib. Rarely Anglicised as dilettant.

1748 If so, you are likely to hear of it as a virtuoso; and if so, I should be glad to profit of it, as an humble dilettante: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Lett., Bk. II. No. xl. Misc. Wks., Vol. II. p. 343 (1777). 1754 he sometimes held forth upon painting, like a member of the Dilettanti club: SMOLLETT, Ferd. Ch. Fathom, ch. xxxii. Wks., Vol. IV. p. 175 (1817). 1776 there are so many of the Dilettanti who reside within the precincts of this ancient seat of music and superstition: J. COLLIER, Mus. Trav., p. 17. — he ordered his servant to bring in his Dilettante ring and wig: ib., p. 54. 1807 Even if it were possible for a mere dilettante to avoid the many gross and dangerous errors into which Sir John Sinclair has fallen: Edin. Rev., Vol. XI. p. 212. 1816 they have been able to deceive the cautious dealers and the experienced dilettanti: J. DALLAWAY, Of Stat. & Sculpt., p. 301. 1820 leaving room, however, for such dilettante rhymers as may be deemed worthy of appearing in the same column: BYRON, in Moore's Life, p. 751 (1875). 1821 I have been only a dilettante eater of opium: Confess. of an Eng. Opium-Eater, Pt. II. p. 121 (1823). 1855 my heart beat stronger | And thicker, until I heard no longer | The snowy-banded, dilettante, | Delicate-handed priest intone: TENNYSON, Maud, viii. 1877 appealing to the dilettante rather than the critical students: Times, Dec. 19. [St.]

*diligence, sb.: Fr.: a French stage-coach, a French omnibus. See banquette.

1748 I shall make my lord very merry with our adventures in the diligence: SMOLLETT, Rod. Rand., ch. xi. Wks., Vol. I. p. 55 (1817). 1776 I came down from London on Friday in the stage-chaise, or diligence, as they will call it: BOSWELL, Lett. to Rev. W. F. Temple, p. 231 (1857). 1815 [See cabriolet]. 1828 the diligence in which the rogues travelled: Engl. in France, Vol. II. p. 120. 1837 The cattle of the diligences, of the post-houses, and even of the cavalry of France, are solid, hardy and good feeders: J. F. COOPER, Europe, Vol. II. p. 160. 1845 the first route is very circuitous: this is performed in a sort of diligence: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. I. p. 356. 1864 He had taken a place for her in the coupé of the diligence to Paris: G. A. SALA, Quite Alone, Vol. I. ch. xi. p. 172. 1883 I just wander in—on the diligence—or in a return fly: M. E. BRADDON, Golden Calf, Vol. I. ch. x. p. 317. 1887 My companion and I seated ourselves in the banquette of an old-fashioned diligence: L. OLIPHANT, Episodes, I. 3.

dilirium: Lat. See delirium.

*diluvium, sb.: Lat., 'flood': irregular accumulations of aqueous (glacial) deposit formerly ascribed to the Flood, now classed as 'drift', and called 'glacial deposits'. See alluvium. Anglicised as diluvye, = 'flood' (Wycliffite Bible, Gen., vi. 17; 2 Pet., ii. 5).

18.. At the outlet of this cañon - in hygone ages a mighty river - it had the appearance of having been slowly raised by the diluvium of that river, and the debris washed down from above: BRET HARTE, Snowbound at Eagle's, p. 48 (1886). 1876 river beds, trenched thousands of feet deep in old diluvium: Times, May 15. [St.]

dimension (=  $\Delta$ ), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. dimension, = 'a measuring'.

1. size, proportion of shape; extent (generally pl.); measurement.

1540 sundry lynes, figures, descriptions, dimensions, or measurynge: ELYOT, Im. Governauce, fol. 41 vo. 1590 Intrench with those dimensions I prescrib'd: MARLOWE, If Tamburl., Wks., p. 57/1 (1865). 1605 my dimensions are as well compact, | My mind as generous: SHAKS., K. Lear, i. 2, 7. 1665 that the Soul and Angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, hath the suffrage of the most: GLANVILL, Sceptis, ch. xiii. p. 84 (1885). 1685 There was shown a draft of the exact shape and dimensions of the crown: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. II. p. 232 (1872).

2. Geom. spatial extension in one direction. Thus a line has one dimension, vis. length; a plane surface has two dimensions, vis. length and breadth; a solid has three dimensions, vis. length, breadth, and thickness.

abt. 1633 length, largenes, and depnes (whiche one calle thre dimensions): DU WES, in Introductio, p. 1053 (Paris, 1852). 1665 He proves the world to be perfect, because it consists of bodies; and that bodies are so, because they consist of a triple dimension: GLANVILL, Sceptis, ch. xix. p. 139 (1885).

3. in algebra, each literal factor of a term is a dimension.

diminuendo, adv. and sb.: It.: Mus.

1. adv.: a direction indicating that the volume of sound is to be gradually decreased. The ordinary sign for diminuendo is  $\rightrightarrows$ .

2. sb., also attrib.: a gradual decrease in the volume of sound.

1776, 1886 [See crescendo 2].

dimittis, 2nd pers. sing. pres. ind. act. of Lat. dimittere, = 'to dismiss', 'to let depart': a leave to depart, a dismissal. See Nunc dimittis.

1615 to see thy children's children ingrafted into the church...to thy peace of conscience, and quietness in thy last dimittis: In Harl. Misc., Vol. II. p. 163 (1809). 1633 But as we cannot live without a permittis, so we must not die without a dimittis: T. ADAMS, Com. a Pet., Sherman Comm., p. 147/1 (1865). 1662 and then had his Dimittis out of this mortal life: FULLER, Worthies, Vol. I. p. 209 (1840).

dinār, sb.: Pers. and Arab. fr. Lat. dēnārius (q. v.): in Modern Persian, small money of account equal to less than one-hundredth of a penny English, being the twentieth part of a bisti (q. v.), and the ten-thousandth part of a toman (q. v.); formerly a dinār was a gold coin current in Persia and India, varying in weight from 1 dwt. to 5 dwts. Troy, and also a silver coin of the same weight as the gold.

1788 By the command of the caliph...a national mint was established...and the inscription of the Dinar...proclaimed the unity of the God of Mahomet: GIBSON, Decl. & Fall, Vol. x. p. 7 (1813). 1836 they did not buy or sell with the dirhem or dinar, for, should any one get these coins into his possession, he would melt them down immediately: J. F. DAVIS, Chinese, Vol. I. ch. i. p. 15.

diné, diner, sb.: Fr.: dinner.

1809 Formerly they used their own language...but every body now gives dinés, soupés, and dejunés: MATY, Tr. Riesbeck's Trav. Germ., Let. xxxi. Pinkerton, Vol. VI. p. 112.

dingo, sb.: Native Australian: the Australian dog.

1849-52 the Australian dingo was the probable ancestor of the spaniel: TODD, Cyc. Anat. & Phys., Vol. IV. p. 131/1. 1882 Less than sixty years ago the wallaby, the kangaroo, the dingo, and the platypus had Northern Australia pretty much to themselves: Standard, Dec. 29, p. 5. 1890 For hunting purposes the author found that dogs would be an assistance (in Queensland), but to his surprise he found that dingoes are much rarer here than further to the south: Athenaeum, Jan. 4, p. 9/3.

dingy ( $\Delta$  = g hard), sb.: Eng. fr. Beng. dingy: a small broadish rowing-boat; the smallest ship's boat; in India a canoe is sometimes called a dingy, dinghy.

1810 On these larger pieces of water there are usually canoes, or dingies: WILLIAMSON, V. M., II. 159. [Yule] 1872 The dinghy in which we make this journey is a keelless boat that threatens to capsize on the slightest provocation: EDW. BRADDON, Life in India, ch. iv. p. 125.

*Diogenēs, name of the cynic philosopher of Sinope, who affected to despise all the comforts and refinements of civilisation; died in old age, B. C. 234.

1573-80 Schollars ar now Aristippi rather then Diogenes: GAB. HARVEY, Lett. Bk., p. 182 (1884). 1616 But lives one rootes like a Diogenes: R. C., Times' Whistle, VII. 3137, p. 99 (1871).

*diorāma, sb.: coined fr. Gk. διὰ, = 'through', and ὄραμα, = 'a sight', 'a spectacle': a spectacular entertainment invented A.D. 1823, in which a picture was seen through an aperture. dochmius, pl. dochmii, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. δόχμιος (πόυς), 'slanting (foot)': a compound measure used in Greek lyric verse of which the normal type resembles an iambus followed by a cretic, — — — —, but which presents nearly thirty varieties owing to resolution of the long syllables into two short syllables each, and the lengthening of the short syllables. It is explained as an iambic tripod with syncope of the middle iambic, or as a bacchius (— — —) followed by a catalectic trochee (a long syllable followed by a pause) and preceded by anacrusis. The latter explanation seems to be fashionable at present.

1830 Of the two dochmii which are usually conjoined in one verse, it is not necessary that each should finish with a whole word, but the words are often divided, and generally too so that they may terminate either in the first syllable of the second dochmius or the penultimate of the first: J. SEAGER, Tr. Hermann's Metres, Bk. II. ch. xxi. p. 55.

Dorian, Doric, pertaining to the Dōres, Gk. Δωριεῖς, the name of one of the four great divisions of the Ancient Hellenes or Greeks who inhabited western and southern Peloponnese, and Corinth and Argos in the Classical age of Greece. The (a) Doric order of architecture is the simplest and most ancient of the great orders. The (b) Dorian mode in Music, was characterised in the diatonic genus by a scale formed of two disjunct tetrachords separated by a whole tone, the first interval of each tetrachord being a semitone. The pitch of this mode was medium and the tone severe. It gave the name to the first authentic church tones. The (c) Doric dialect is a group of Ancient Greek dialects distinguished by a comparatively broad vowel system and by the retention of palatal mutes and mutes generally. The term Doric has been applied to the dialects of the Scotch Lowlands and of the north of England.

*drama, pl. drāmata (in Eng. dramas), sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. δρᾶμα, = 'something acted', 'a play'.

1. a stage-play, a composition written for the stage, or as if for the stage (cabinet-drama).

1616 I cannot for the stage a Drama lay...but thou writ'st the play: B. JONSON, Epigr., 118, Wks., p. 805 (1616). 1641 The scripture also affords us a divine pastoral drama in the Song of Solomon: MILTON, Ch. Govt., Bk. II, Pref., Wks., Vol. I. p. 120 (1806). 1670 Then the several Opera's or Musical Dramata are acted and sung with rare Cost and Art: R. LASSELS, Voy. Ital., Pt. I. p. 140 (1698). bef. 1733 no preconceived Drama could maintain and pursue its Fable and tend to its final Catastrophe, more regular and naturally than all these matters did to destroy King Charles II.: R. NORTH, Examen, I. ii. 28, p. 44 (1740). 1754 these excellent musical dramas: LORD CHESTERFIELD, in World, No. 98, Misc. Wks., Vol. I. p. 164 (1777). 1820 fancy could call back the phantoms of a splendid drama which was past: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. iii. p. 106. *1878 Mr. Joseph Mackay's new drama, to be produced at the Park theatre: Lloyd's Weekly, May 19, p. 5/3. [St.]

2. theatrical representation in the abstract; the literature of plays in the abstract.

bef. 1627 I am told his drollery yields to none the English drama did ever produce: MIDDLETON, Mayor Queenb., Wks., Vol. II. p. 3 (1885). 1711 the received rules of the Drama: Spectator, No. 13, Mar. 15, p. 24/2 (Morley). 1727 We should not wholly omit the Drama, which makes so great and so lucrative a part of Poetry: POPE, Art of Sinking, ch. xvi. Wks., Vol. VI. p. 219 (1757). 1731 If these Characters were not written in the Genius of the Drama, rather to excite Terror or Laughter than to give a true History of Things: MEDLEY, Tr. Kolben's Cape Good Hope, Vol. I. p. 37. *1875 the Musical Drama: Echo, June 2. [St.]

3. a course of action and suffering in real life analogous to the progress of a play.

1883 the obsolete scenes of the Messianic drama: XIX Cent., Feb., p. 208.

*drāmatis personāe, phr.: Late Lat.: characters of a play, characters of a story, characters of a drama of real life (see drama 3).

1739 Our astonishment at their absurdity you can never conceive; we had enough to do to express it by screaming an hour louder than the whole drāmatis personae: GRAY, Letters, No. xx. Vol. I. p. 40 (1819). 1762 practising a play we are to act here this Christmas holidays—all the Drāmatis Personae are of the English: STERNK, Letters, Wks., p. 754/2 (1839). 1771 The ancient drāmatis personae are dead: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. V. p. 279 (1857). 1787 In this he resembles a greater genius of our own, who makes but an indifferent figure in the drāmatis personae of the sixteenth century: P. BECKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. I. p. 33 (1805). 1806 I was within an ace of leaping on the stage, and knocking down all the rest of the Drāmatis Personae: BERESFORD, Miseries, Vol. I. p. 92 (5th Ed.). 1810 Then his characters are all selected from the most common drāmatis personae of poetry: Edin. Rev., Vol. 16, p. 270. 1819 how is it possible for an author to introduce his personae drāmatis to his readers in a more interesting and effectual manner: SCOTT, Bride of Lammermoor, ch. I. Wks., Vol. I. p. 969/1 (1867). 1842 the eventual destination of his drāmatis personae: BARNHAM, Ingolds. Leg., p. 238 (1865). *1875 Echo, Sept. 14. [St.] 1877 We can't be all drāmatis personae, and no spectator: C. READE, Woman Hater, ch. v. p. 57 (1883).

ductus, sō.: Lat.: tube, direction.

1672 such Stones would usually split according to the Ductus of their Grain: R. BOYLE, Virtues of Gems, p. 21.

ductus literarum, phr.: Late Lat.: the course (of error in transcription) of letters, the indications of the genuine reading which the form of a corrupt reading in a manuscript gives to an expert.

1888 Of all our literature there is none more carelessly printed than our early drama—none in which conjecture, founded on the ductus literarum, comes more legitimately into play for the correction of its errors: Athenaeum, Jan. 7, p. 25/1.

*dudeen: Ir. See doodheen.

*duel (u), Eng. fr. Fr. duel, or It. duello; duello, It.: sō.: a single combat on a point of honor; a contest.

1588 The first and second cause will not serve my turn; the passado he respects not, the duello he regards not: his disgrace is to be called boy; but his glory is to subdue men: SHAKES., L. L. L., i. a, 185. 1600 the true lawes of the duello: B. JONSON, Cynthia, Rev., l. 3, Wks., p. 101 (1616). 1603 And with his Rival enters secret Duel: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, p. 83 (1608).

1610 The Duello or Single Combat: J. SELDEN, Title. 1619 One man commits not murders in Duels and Challenges: PURCHAS, Microcosmus, ch. xlv.

p. 415. 1620 challenge him to a Duel: BRENT, Tr. Scave's Hist. Counc. Trent, Bk. vi. p. 527 (1676). 1623 nor shall one heare of a duel here in an age: HOWELL, Lett., III. XXXI. p. 109 (1645).

1627 Here was things carried now in the true nature of a quiet duello: MIDDLETON, Widow, i. 2, Wks., Vol. v. p. 146 (1885).

1658 The first word in the Penny-libel is ominous for a Duel: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 100 (1687). 1659 Layman the Jesuit... thinks that a man may lawfully fight a duel: R. BAXTER, Key for Catholics, ch. xv. p. 60.

1667 Dream not of their fight, | As of a duel: MILTON, P. L., XII. 387. 1671 Victory and triumph to the Son of God, | Now entering his great duel, not of arms, | But to vanquish by wisdom hellish wiles: —P. R., l. 174.

1883 Whereupon the Old Whip begins to talk of "personal abuse," vapours about the duello, hints that he has called his man out before now, and again insinuates that Lord Brabourne is not telling the truth about his correspondence with Mr. Gladstone: St. James's Gaz., Jan. 12, p. 3.

*duenna, sō.: Sp. dueña: a lady, esp. a dame in charge of a young woman.

1623 MABBE, Tr. Aleman's Life of Guzman (1630). [T. L. K. Oliphant] 1716 the old and withered matrons, known by the frightful name of gouvernantes and duennas: ADDISON, Wks., Vol. IV. p. 400 (1856). 1761 Kitty Dashwood... living in the palace as Duenna to the Queen: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. III. p. 435 (1857).

1787 Jealousy, without doubt, first instituted this Male-Duenna—who, watchful as Argus, and spiteful as the Dragon of the Hesperides, observed the lady's looks, controuled her actions, and returned her at night as pure as he had received her in the morning: P. BECKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. I. p. 98 (1805).

1845 as a duenna all eyes and toothless follows a pretty damsel: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. II. p. 573. 1854 they turn the duenna out of doors—the toothless old dragon: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. I. ch. x. p. 119 (1879).

*duet (u), Eng. fr. It. duetto; duetto, pl. duetti, It.: sō.: Mus.: a composition for two performers; the execution of such a piece of music by two performers.

1724 DUETTI, or DUETTO, are little Songs or Airs in two Parts: Short Explic. of For. Wds. in Mus. Bks. 1808 illness closely confining you to the house, and thereby securing your attention, during the whole performance of this diabolical duetto [of piteous moans of a jack, and a Sign squeaking in the wind]: BERSFORD, Miseries, Vol. I. p. 189 (5th Ed.). 1837 At the conclusion of the duetto they begged for the grace of a terzetto: C. MAC FARLANE, Banditti & Robbers, p. 187.

duettino, sō.: It, dim. of duetto: a short simple duet.

1839 Ariettas and duettinos succeed each other: LONGFELLOW, Hyperion, p. 399. [C.]

ADAMS, Wks., Vol. ix. p. 459 (1854). 1808 gaining a little paltry éclat, without the remotest possibility of assisting the common cause by the attempt: Edin. Rev., Vol. 13, p. 232. 1815 The difficulties of continuing or discontinuing acquaintance, of avoiding éclat, were enough to occupy her: J. AUSTEN, Emma, Vol. 1. p. 122 (1833). 1839 and never did he acquit himself with more éclat: MISS PARDOE, Beauties of the Bosph., p. 161. 1850 she...had starred the provinces with great éclat: THACKERAY, Pendennis, Vol. 1. ch. xix. p. 202 (1879). 1853 the Session closed with éclat by a speech of Palmerston's in his most flashy and successful style: GREVILLE, Memoirs, 3rd Ser., i. iii. 80.

3. notoriety, flashy brilliance, exposure.

1672 the éclat of the Court gallantry: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. iv. p. 31 (1872). 1751 she is past the glare and éclat of youth: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 35, p. 154 (1774). 1781 The names of most éclat in the Opposition are two names to which those walls have been much accustomed at the same period: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. viii. p. 120 (1858). 1799 a step that will give more éclat to the business than I think it deserves: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. ix. p. 20 (1854). 1811 men of fashion are thought by many ladies to give éclat to vice: L. M. HAWKINS, Countess, Vol. 1. p. 64 (2nd Ed.). 1823 The reason's obvious: if there's an éclat, | They lose their caste at once, as do the Parias: BYRON, Don Juan, xii. lxxviii. 1824 his success in such a pursuit would give a ridiculous éclat to the whole affair: SCOTT, Redgauntlet, ch. ii. p. 163 (1886). 1830 in 1778 he acquired extraordinary éclat by the seduction of the Marchioness of Carmarthen: J. GALT, Life of Byron, p. 9. 1879 secured from the éclat of a disgraceful bankruptcy: MRS. OLIPHANT, Within the Precincts, ch. iv. p. 40.

4. lustre, renown.

1743 Consider what lustre and éclat it will give you...to be the best scholar, of a gentleman, in England: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. I. No. 140, p. 351 (1774). 1759 the eclat of his victories: E. W. MONTAGU, Anc. Rep., p. 132. 1792 This perpetual parade of sanctity gave him such an eclat and unmeasurable credit: H. BROOKE, Foot of Qual., Vol. III. p. 72. 1809 So free was he from being elated with the eclat of his wonderful arms, and so far from thinking of higher things than how to defend himself: MATY, Tr. Riebeck's Trav. Germ., Let. II. Pinkerton, Vol. VI. p. 190. 1811 scarcely hold out against the superior fashion and éclat of the Established Church: Edin. Rev., Vol. 19, p. 160.

éclatant, fem. -ante, adj.: Fr.: effective, noisy, brilliant, causing éclat.

bef. 1744 Certain it is, that something extraordinary and éclatant must be done: POPE, Wks., Vol. VIII. p. 364 (1872).

eclipsis: mistake for ellipsis (q. v.).

Ecnephias: Lat. fr. Gk. ἐκνεφίας: a hurricane, supposed to be caused by meeting clouds.

1601 a whistle-puff or gust called Typhon (i.) the storme Ecnephias aforesaid, sent out with a winding violence: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 2, ch. 48, Vol. 1. p. 24. 1727 The circling Typhon, whirl'd from point to point, | Exhausting all the rage of all the sky, | And dire Ecnephias reign: THOMSON, Summer, 986 (1834). 1731 were often in Danger from the Ecnephias, as the Naturalists call it, or the Travado-Wind, very frequent between the Tropicks: MEDLEY, Tr. Kolben's Cape Good Hope, Vol. 1. p. 11.

écorché, sb.: Fr., 'flayed (figure)': a representation in painting or sculpture of an animal figure with the skin removed.

1854 if you will have the kindness to look by the écorché there, you will see that little packet which I have left for you: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. II. ch. xl. p. 415 (1879).

ecphōnēsis, pl. ecphōnēsēs, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐκφώνησις, 'exclamation': Rhet.: the effective use of an exclamation or interrogation.

1589 Ecphonisis, or the Outcry: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poets., III. xix. p. 221 (1869).

écrasé, fem. -ée, part.: Fr.: crushed, ruined, humiliated. Sometimes used as vb.

1779 we have not heard yet how many people were écrasés: In J. H. Jesse's Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. iv. p. 30 (1882). 1848 she écrasée all rival charmers: THACKERAY, Van. Fair, Vol. II. ch. xvi. p. 177 (1879).

*écru, adj.: Fr.: unbleached, raw.

1850 Mantelets...composed of...écru silk: Harper's Mag., Vol. II. p. 720.

ecstasis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐκστασις, 'standing out', 'removal from the proper place': distraction, entrancement, astonishment, ecstasy, as in Late Gk. Often wrongly spelt extasis, perhaps after Fr. extase.

! 1582 with vnordinat extasis hamperd: R. STANVHURST, Tr. Virgil's Aen., Bk. III. p. 80 (1860). 1604 Which words being uttered Julia began to stammer and to change countenance, falling into an extasis, and so leeseing her voice, remained dumme untill she died: R. PARSONS, Rev. Ten Publ. Disp., Pref., p. 30. 1621 another called bauge, like in effect to opium, which puts them for a time into a kinde of extasis, and makes them gently to laugh: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., Pt. 2, Séc. 5, Mem. 1, Subs. 5, Vol. II. p. 130 (1827). 1658 if any have been so happy as truly to understand Christian annihilation, exaltation, exultation, liquefaction: SIR TH. BROWN, Hydriotaph., p. 83.

ecthlipsis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐκθλιψις, 'a squeezing out': Lat. Prosod.: the elision of a final m with the preceding vowel before the following word if it has an initial vowel.

écu, escu (Cotgr.), sb.: Fr., 'shield': name of old French gold and silver coins; often translated 'crown'; the sum of five (formerly three) francs.

bef. 1593 the stately Catholics | Send Indian gold to coin me French ecues: MARLOWE, Massacre at Paris, Wks., p. 228/2 (1858). 1673 Then they dry it and carry it by sea to Marseilles where they sell it at 8 escus the Milliere: Every Milliere consists of 10 Packieres; every Packiere of 100 Manados or handfuls: J. RAY, Journ. Low Countr., p. 480. 1886 a gentleman would find himself lodged and fed comfortably enough for 100 écus a year: E. B. HAMILTON, in Eng. Hist. Rev., Apr., p. 271.

*eczema, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Late Gk. ἐκζεμα, 'a pustule': an inflammatory disease of the skin with morbid secretion of lymph and redness of the skin or pustules.

edax rerum, phr.: Lat.: devourer of (all) things; devouring (all) things. The epithet is applied to time, Ovid, Met., 15, 234.

1608 that, that Æsculapius, were he now extant, could not heal, or edax rerum take away: MIDDLETON, Family of Love, v. 3, Wks., Vol. III. p. 110 (1885). 1651 at last Time, which is edax rerum, shall first digest all fears and discords: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 60 (1872). 1670 Time, which in all other places is called Edax rerum, may here be called Bibax rerum, having sup'd up here a whole Town: R. LASSELLS, Voy. Ital., Pt. II. p. 193 (1698).

Edda: Iceland, lit. 'great-grandmother': name of the collection of old Icelandic poems made early in the twelfth century, and also of the later prose version of the same.

1787 I told you before that (in a time of dearth) I would borrow from the Edda, without entering too minutely on particulars: GRAY, Letters, No. xcix. Vol. II. p. 27 (1819). 1780 I shall borrow a few lines of this poem, which are mentioned in the Edda among the Hringakeiti, and that prove how far these poets went in their Antonomasias: Tr. Von Troil's Lett. on Iceland, p. 201 (2nd Ed.). 1788 The contest concerning the antiquity of the later Edda is equally ridiculous: Gent. Mag., LVIII. i. 137/2. 1818 Among many other classical works, it [Geyser] occurs in the Edda, towards the close of the ancient and sublime poem: E. HENDERSON, Iceland, Vol. 1. p. 42. 1880 A good many parts of the Edda have, most likely, arisen in the land of the Cherusci: MACDOWALL-ANSON, Asgard & the Gods, p. 18.

Edelweiss, sb.: Ger.: name of an Alpine flowering plant, Leontopodium alpinum, found at a high altitude, and in places difficult to reach on the Alps and Pyrenees. It is a small downy plant, with white downy involucre, much prized for its rarity and peculiar appearance.

1877 Esmè having remarked at dinner that she did not possess a specimen of the edelweis, at breakfast-time next morning she found a bouquet of the same upon her plate: L. W. M. LOCKHART, Mine is Thine, ch. xix. p. 179 (1879).

edema: Late Lat. See oedema.

*Eden: Heb. Eden, lit. 'delight': in Hebrew mythology, name of the delightful 'garden' in which our first parents lived before the Fall; hence, any delightful place or district. Also, name of a region in Biblical geography, perhaps in N.W. Mesopotamia.

1665 I think never man could boast it, without the Precincts of Paradise; but He, that came to gain us a better Eden than we lost: GLANVILL, Scepsis, ch. xiv. p. 95 (1885). 1813 Caught by the laughing tides that lave | These Edens of the eastern wave: BYRON, Giaour, Wks., Vol. IX. p. 148 (1832). 1864 To a sweet little Eden on earth that I know, | A mountain islet pointed and peak'd: TENNYSON, Islet, 14. 1877 Edens, the gates of which no flaming swords nor "watch of winged Hydra" guard: L. W. M. LOCKHART, Mine is Thine, ch. ii. p. 11 (1879). 1880 In summer the inhabitants may be almost said to migrate from their houses into these miniature Edens: J. PAYN, Confident. Agent, ch. i. p. 2.

edepol, interj.: Lat.: verily, truly. The letters -pol are for the vocative of Pollux.

1621 Away with your pishery pashery, your pols and your edipols: Skoo-makers Holy-day. [Nares] edile: Eng. fr. Lat. See ædile.

*editio princeps, phr.: Late Lat.: original edition, first printed edition.

1815 The room of the Editiones principes [pl.], contains every thing to gratify the taste of the bibliographer: J. SCOTT, Visit to Paris, p. 237 (2nd Ed.). 1885 The first part deals mainly with the editiones principes: Athenæum, Oct. 24, p. 539/s. 1887 The issue of this editio princeps is strictly limited to 125 copies: R. C. BROWNE, in Academy, Apr. 9, p. 250/s.

*édition de luxe, phr.: Fr., 'edition of luxury': a handsomely and expensively got up edition, a fancy edition.

1819 But the paper used for printing, except in what are emphatically called the éditions de luxe, is very inferior to ours: Edin. Rev., Vol. 39, p. 377. 1882 A few months ago the Defendants advertised an édition de luxe, in two volumes, entitled, "The Life, Letters, and Uncollected Works of William Makepeace Thackeray": Standard, Dec. 21, p. 5. 1885 The volume may fairly claim to be, in a modest way, an édition de luxe: Athenæum, July 25, p. 111/2.

*editor ( = 二 ), sb.: Eng., as if fr. Lat. editor, = 'producer', 'exhibitor': one who edits or produces editions.

1. one who prepares a copy of another person's literary work for publication or republication (with or without notes or comments).

1649 some interloper may perhaps underhand fall upon the work at a lower rate, and undo the first editor: Bp. HALL, Cases of Cons., Dec. 1, Case 5. [R.] 1712 Our Party-Authors will also afford me a great Variety of Subjects, not to mention Editors, Commentators, and others: Spectator, No. 457, Aug. 14, p. 655/s (Morley). bef. 1794 Professor Breiting of Zurich, the learned editor of a Septuagint Bible: GIBBON, Life & Lett., p. 45 (1869). 1818 They stand forth marshall'd in a handsome troop, | To meet the ingenious youth of future ages, | Till some less rigid editor shall stoop | To call them back into their separate cages: BYRON, Don Juan, l. xlv.

2. one who prepares a magazine, journal, or review for publication, and who procures contributions for the same.

1807 a letter to the Editor of his favourite Magazine: BERRSFORD, Miseries, Vol. II. p. 185 (5th Ed.).

*educator ( = 二 = 二 ), sb.: Eng. fr. Lat. educator, noun of agent to educare, = 'to rear', 'bring up', 'train': one who brings up, one who rears, an instructor, a trainer.

1. concr. an expression of praise, a laudatory speech or composition, a laudation.

1589 all your Hymnes and Encomia of Pindarus and Callimachus: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., I. xix. p. 56 (1869). 1591 slightly perusing it, gaue it this encomium, that now there was rime in it, but afore it had neither rime nor reason: SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, Apol. Poet., in Haslewood's Eng. Poets & Poetry, Vol. II. p. 142 (1815). 1598 [he] crownes your beautie with such encomions and deuises: B. JONSON, Ev. Man in his Hum., iv. 3, Wks., p. 47 (1616). 1617 I came not hither, sir, for an encomium: MIDDLETON, Fair Quar., III. 1, Wks., Vol. IV. p. 208 (1885). 1623 The wits of the Court here, have made diuers encomiums of him, and of his affection to the Lady Infante: HOWELL, Lett., III. xix. p. 77 (1645). 1640 Your early Encomiums also of Learning and Philosophy: H. MORE, Phil. Po. (1647). 1642 His first encomium is, "that the sun looks not upon a braver, nobler conuocation than is that of king, peers, and commons": MILTON, Apol. Smect., Wks., Vol. I. p. 246 (1806). 1654 having been an Ample Encomium of it: R. WHITLOCK, Zootomia, p. 345. 1665 In order to which, I think it needless to endeavour to celebrate you in a profest Encomium: GLANVILLE, Scepis, p. IV. (1885). 1675 as high an Encomium as any Prince is capable of: J. SMITH, Christ. Relig. Appeal, Bk. I. ch. iv. § 1, p. 11. 1686 I cannot help digressing from your Encomium a little, to reflect upon the Stages Misfortune: D'URFEE, Banditti, sig. a 2 r. 1693 So that all this high Elogy and Encomium given by this Heathen of Moses, sprang only from the majestic Brevity of this one Expression: SOUTH, Serm., Vol. II. p. 124 (1727).

1709 many are as much below the Dignity of Satyr as Encomium, even not knowing themselves what Business they have here: MRS. MANLEY, New Atal., Vol. II. p. 209 (2nd Ed.). 1716 The king smiled at the encomium which was given him: ADDISON, Wks., Vol. IV. p. 506 (1856). 1728 You know he has a satirical turn; but never lashes any folly, without giving due encomiums to its opposite virtue: CIBBER, Vanbrugh's Prov. Husb., I. Wks., Vol. II. p. 244 (1776). bef. 1733 Of these irrefragable Authorities, some he affords great Encomiums to: R. NORTH, Examen, I. I. 7, p. 18 (1749). 1754 Strange Encomiums I have heard from the Natives upon the Language of their Country: E. BURT, Lett. N. Scott., Vol. II. p. 180. 1776 I was greatly flattered by these encomiums: J. COLLIER, Mss. Trav., p. 99. 1798 Your encomium on the executive authority of the national government, is in a degree highly flattering: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. IX. p. 210 (1854). 1820 the same encomiums will apply, in every particular, to the family of the Duke di Sangro: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. I. p. 5.

2. abstr. praise, high commendation, laudation.

1626 Encomion, Praise: COCKERAM, Pt. I. (2nd Ed.). 1792 in terms of high praise and aggravated encomium: H. BROOKE, Fool of Qual., Vol. II. p. 242.

encora, interj.: confusion between It. ancora and Fr. encore (qq. v.).

1766 But talks of the op'ras and his Signioras | Cries bravo, benissimo, bravo, encora! C. ANSTEV, New Bath Guide, Wks., p. 64 (1808). 1776 I was so struck with his masterly performance, that not being able to clap my hands together, in token of applause, I cried out bravissimo! encora! J. COLLIER, Mus. Trav., p. 39.

*encore, adv.: Fr.: again. In French the regular call for the repetition of a musical or other performance is not encore!, but bis!; though encore is used to mean 'recommences'.

1. interj.: again!, the exclamation by which a repetition of a performance (e.g. of a musical piece in a concert or opera) is asked for. Often heard as Caw!.

1712 at their crying out Encore or Altro Volto, the Performer is so obliging as to sing it over again: Spectator, No. 314, Feb. 29, p. 453/2 (Morley). 1765 salad and soup,—soup and salad—salad and soup, encore—'Tis too much for sinners: STERNE, Trist. Shand., vii. xvii. Wks., p. 300 (1839). 1766 the jig I adore | Pray speak to Sir Toby to cry out encore: C. ANSTEV, New Bath Guide, Wks., p. 83 (1808). 1807 At the Play—just as you are beginning to recover yourself, after a song of unequalled length and insipidity, to which the singer has added the deficiencies of taste, time, and tune,—“encore! encore!”—from every mouth in the house but your own: BERRSFORD, Miseries, Vol. II. p. 158 (5th Ed.).

2. sb.: a request for the repetition of a performance; the repetition of a performance by (or as if by) request.

1731 You are amaz'd: The Hottentot is delighted to see it, and will give you as many Encores as you please: MEDLEY, Tr. Kolben's Cape Good Hope, Vol. I. p. 243. 1818 nearly two hours had been passed in recitations, accompanied by bravos and encores: LADY MORGAN, Fl. Macarthy, Vol. III. ch. iii. p. 152 (1819). 1848 the whole house was unanimous for an encore: THACKERAY, Van. Fair, Vol. II. ch. xvi. p. 176 (1879).

3. vb.: to call for the repetition of a performance, to call out 'encore!'.

1784 we have been actually in treaty for repairing to Sandleford to encore my visit: In W. Roberts' Mem. Hannah More, Vol. I. p. 198 (1835). 1786 Yet, for DIDONE how they roar! | And Cara! Cara! loud encore: H. MORE, Florio, 218, p. 15.

encourage (— 1 = 2), encorage, vb.: Eng. fr. Fr. encourager, Old Fr. encourager: to give courage to, to cheer, to incite to energy or fortitude; also, by extension, to give strength or spirit to (liquor).

1597 We all that are engaged to this loss: SHAKS., II Hen. IV., i. 1, 180.

I. 2 b. to allure, attract.

bef. 1719 Good-nature engages every body to him: ADDISON. [J.]

I. 3. to occupy the time or attention of, to employ, to keep at work; also, reflex.

1687 She was now engaged in the marriage of my cousin: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. II. p. 278 (1872). bef. 1700 For I shall sing of battles, blood, and rage, | Which princes and their people did engage: DRYDEN. [J.]

I. 4. to secure the use or service of by persuasion, agreement, or contract.

1672 entreat him to engage Sir John Cutler... to provide us a grave and learned man: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. II. p. 79 (1872).

I. 5. to enter into conflict or contest with, to encounter, to attack.

bef. 1744 The rebel knave, who dares his prince engage, | Proves the just victim of his royal rage: POPE. [J.]

II. intr.: 1. to pledge one's word, to commit one's self to a statement.

bef. 1661 How proper the remedy for the malady I engage not: FULLER. [C. E. D.]

II. 2. to entangle one's self, to involve one's self.

bef. 1765 Vice in its first approach with care to shun; | The wretch, who once engages, is undone: MALLET, Prol. to Thomson's Agamemnon. [R.]

II. 3. to occupy or employ one's self.

bef. 1700 'Tis not indeed my talent to engage | In lofty trifles, or to swell my page | With wind and noise: DRYDEN. [J.]

II. 4. to enter upon a conflict, to begin to fight.

bef. 1674 Upon advertisement of the Scots army, the earl of Holland was sent with a body to meet and engage with it: CLARENDON. [J.]

engastrimythus, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐγγαστρίμυθος: a ventriloquist, esp. a woman who delivers oracular responses by ventriloquism. Anglicised as engastrimith, engastrimuth, engastrimyth.

1603 those spirits speaking within the bellies of possessed folk, such as in old time they called Engastrimithi, and Eurycees, and be now termed Pythons: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 1327. 1603 So all incense, the pale Engastrimith | (Rul'd by the furious spirit hee's haunted with) | Speaks in his womb: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Imposture, p. 253 (1608).

enghle, engle: Eng. fr. Du. See inglo.

Englese Italianato è un diavolo incarnato, phr.: It.: an Italianised Englishman is a devil incarnate.

bef. 1568 ASCHAM, Scholemaster, p. 132 (1884).

engorge ( $\cup = \cup$ ), vb.: Eng. fr. Fr. engorger: to swallow down, swallow up greedily, devour; spec. to fill to excess with blood (applied to animal vessels and tissues).

1559 Mirr. Mag., p. 425. [T.] 1590 That is the Gulfe of Greedinesse, they say, | That deepe engorgeth all this worldes pray: SPENS., F. Q., II. xii. 3. 1667 Greedily she engorg'd without restraint: MILTON, P. L., IX. 791.

engoué, fem. engouée, part.: Fr.: infatuated (with prep. de).

1822-3 And what can you expect from an idiot, who is engoué of a common rope-dancing girl: SCOTT, Per. Peak, ch. xlviii. p. 535 (1886).

engouement, engouiment, sb.: Fr.: infatuation, infatuated admiration.

1818 she struck me to be a mere minaudière! some stale engouement of my mother's, who came in this extraordinary way upon the scene: LADY MORGAN, Fl. Macarthy, Vol. III. ch. ii. p. 93 (1819). 1818 he did not notice my engouement, otherwise than by a kind smile: MRS. OPIE, New Tales, Vol. III. p. 56. 1848 yet as long as her engouement lasted her attachment was prodigious, and she clung still with the greatest energy to Rebecca: THACKERAY, Van. Fair, Vol. I. ch. xiv. p. 151 (1879). 1865 all Baden was too occupied with Princess Marie Volgarouski's desperate engouement of a young Tuscan composer: OUIDA, Strathmore, Vol. I. ch. xiii. p. 204.

enhydros, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐνυδρος, = 'containing water': a kind of translucent chalcedony which contains water.

abt. 1400 there is the Vesselle of Ston, as it were of Marbelle, that Men cleepen Enydros, that evermore droppeth Watre: Tr. Maunder's Voyage, ch. iii. p. 15 (1839). 1567 Enydros, is meane or smale in bignesse, continually sweating or dropping: J. MAPLET, Greene For., fol. 7 v<sup>o</sup>. 1797 Encyc. Brit.

*énigma, ænigma, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. αἰνύμα: a dark saying, a saying or question under the plain meaning of which a hidden meaning lies, a riddle; hence, generally, a puzzle, a cause of perplexity, a very difficult problem. Occasionally Anglicised as enigm(e), ænim(e). The form (a)enigmaes has the English pl. s added to a false Lat. pl. (instead of ænigmata) on the analogy of certain Gk. neuter nouns in -a, which in Lat. become fem. and of the first declension.

1588 Arm. Some enigma, some riddle: come, thy l'envoy; begin. Cost. No egma, no riddle, no l'envoy: SHAKS., L. L. L., iii. 72. 1589 If you find darke Ænigmas or strange concepts as if Sphinx on the one side, and Rouscius on the other were playing the waggies: GREENE, Menaphon, p. 4 (1880).

1589 speaking obscurely and in riddle called Ænigma: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., III. vii. p. 166 (1869). bef. 1593 if you conceive mine enigma, gentlemen, what shall I be? GREENE, Jas. IV., iii. 2, Wks., p. 204/2 (1861). 1595 that they have forged arithmetical ænigmes: W. C., Polimanteia, sig. E i v<sup>o</sup>. 1603 her quick spirit in propounding, and her subtil wit and wisdom in assailing riddles and darke questions, such as be called Ænigmes: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 329. 1607 an Ænigma or Riddle: TOPSELL, Four-f. Beasts, p. 17. 1607 if he haue a Sphinx, I haue an Edipus... This is such a knotty Enigma: A. BREWER, Lingua, iii. 6, sig. G i v<sup>o</sup>. 1620 The sense was covered with divers enigmaes, in a Poetical Propheticall form, yet not so but that it was easily understood: BRENT, Tr. Soave's Hist. Couns., Trent, Bk. VII. p. 652 (1676).

1625 Heracitus saith well, in one of his Ænigmaes: Dry Light is enar the best: BACON, Ess., Friendship, p. 175 (1871). 1642 it [true affection] is a Body of Ænigma's, Mysteries and Riddles: SIR TH. BROWN, Relig. Med., Pt. II. § vi. p. 37 (1886). 1685 those common Ænigma's of Magnetism, Fluxes, Reflexes, and the like: GLANVILL, Sceptis, ch. ii. p. 9 (1885). 1689 In effect 'tis a very dark Ænigma: DRYDEN, Mock-Astrol., iv. Wks., Vol. I. p. 309 (1701). 1678 that vulgar Enigm or Riddle of Boys, concerning an Eunuch striking a Bat: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. I. ch. iii. p. 107. 1711 Species of Wit... Allegories, Ænigmas, Mottos, Parables: Spectator, No. 62, May 11, p. 105/1 (Morley).

1744 His Immortality alone can solve | That darkest of Ænigmas, human Hope: E. YOUNG, Night Thoughts, vii. p. 144 (1773). 1797 Every Spanish inscription and shopboard is an enigma: SOUTHEY, Lett. dnr. Resid. in Spain, p. 97. 1806 life itself, according to our views of it, is one great enigma: BRESFORD, Miseries, Vol. I. p. 58 (5th Ed.). 1815 the solution or explanation of this riddle, enigma, or mystery: SCOTT, Guy Mannering, ch. xlii. p. 371 (1852). 1820 she propounded her ænigmas to the unfortunate traveller: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. xi. p. 323. 1864 "She's an enigma. She's a Sphinx." "Is she demi-monde?" G. A. SALA, Quite Alone, Vol. I. ch. i. p. 10. 1878 There is evidently some strange enigma to be solved: Lloyd's Whky., May 19, p. 7/a. [St.]

enjambement, sb.: Fr.: the act or effect of beginning a clause in one verse, and ending it in the next; also, by extension, an analogous treatment of other things.

1883 Publishers may have their reasons for affecting the enjambement of volumes: Sat. Rev., Vol. 56, p. 472a. 1886 In Marie Stuart and Jungfrau von Orleans anapestic substitution is very frequent, but enjambement and feminine ending are less used: MAYOR, Eng. Metre, p. 202. 1888 There are two awkward enjambements here [in the translation]: Athenaeum, Jan. 28, p. 1121.

enjouement, enjoûment, sb.: Fr.: sprightliness, playfulness.

1750 talks sentiments...interlarded with enjouement, and accompanied with some oblique ogle: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 2, p. 5 (1774).

enlevé, part.: Fr.: carried away, carried off, kidnapped.

1837 His Majesty has been abducted, or spirited away, 'enlevé,' by some person or persons unknown: CARLYLE, Fr. Rev., II. iv. 227.

*ennui, sb.: Fr.: annoying weariness of mind, painful listlessness and depression caused by lack of interesting objects and pursuits, boredom, tedium.

1742 The only fault of it is insipidity: which is apt now and then to give a sort of ennui: GRAY, Letters, No. LVIII. Vol. I. p. 127 (1819). 1758 In less than a month, the man, used to business, found, that living like a gentleman was dying of ennui: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 105, p. 413 (1774).

1765 I certainly should not rock the sea in search of ennui, that I have in this perfection at home: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. IV. p. 392 (1857). 1792 I am still free from languor and ennui: T. REID, Corresp., Wks., p. 302a (1846).

1806 Suddenly rousing yourself from the ennui of a solitary walk by striking your toe...against the sharp corner of a fixed flint: BERESFORD, Miseries, Vol. I. p. 22 (5th Ed.). 1808 It was a scene of ennui and vapid dullness: H. MORE, Celebs in search of a Wife, Vol. II. ch. XXXV. p. 102 (1809).

1809 ennui—that stagnation of life and feeling which results from the absence of all motives to exertion: Edin. Rev., Vol. 4, p. 377. 1820 that mental ennui which every species of diversion that consists in spectacle alone, must inevitably produce: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. iii. p. 94.

1838 I made him think he should die of ennui if I did not accompany him: LORD LYTTON, Paul Clifford, p. 235 (1848). 1878 I want a variety of ennui: GEO. ELIOT, Dan. Deronda, Bk. VI. ch. XLVIII. p. 441.

*ennuyé, fem. ennuyée, adj.: Fr.: bored, suffering from ennui. Also as sb., one whose capacity for being interested and for healthy enjoyment of life is enfeebled or destroyed by satiety.

1757 I am alone and ennuyé to the last degree: GRAY, in GRAY & MASON'S Corresp., p. 96 (1853). 1767 If she should...be very much ennuyé...you will be blamed for having persuaded her to come: In J. H. JESSE'S Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. II. p. 126 (1882).

1810 the witliest, the most selfish, and the most ennuyé of the whole party: JEFFREY, Essays, Vol. I. p. 244 (1844). 1813 I am ennuyé beyond my usual tense of that yawning verb: BYRON, in MOORE'S Life, Vol. II. p. 298 (1832).

1818 Delightful Ireland, where one is never safe and never ennuyé for a single moment: LADY MORGAN, Fl. MacCarthy, Vol. III. ch. I. p. 47 (1819). 1839 the constrained effort of the ennuyé man of the world: E. A. POE, Wks., Vol. I. p. 120 (1884). 1849 He must be terribly ennuyé here: LORD BEACONSFIELD, Tancred, Bk. V. ch. VII. p. 394 (1887).

*ennuyer, vb.: Fr.: to weary, to bore, to distress by being tedious or uninteresting.

1768 I have no occasion to ennuyer myself, though I cannot go to Almack's or the Opera: In J. H. JESSE'S Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. II. p. 314 (1882).

enormity (= ㄣ ㄣ), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. énormité: a heinous crime or offence, an outrage, an extravagance, an excess; also, abstr. heinousness, extreme badness.

1489 And to avoide such enormities and injuries: CAXTON, Stat. 4 Hen. VII., c. 12, sig. d vi v<sup>o</sup> (1869). 1545 But here they say that in healing these evils and enormities we do more hurte than good as to make tumultes: G. JOVE, Exp. Dan., ch. xii. [R.] 1598 We shall speak of the particular abuses and enormities of the government: SPENS. [J.] 1713 There are many little enormities in the world, which our preachers would be very glad to see removed: ADDISON, Guardian. [J.]

*enquête, sb.: Fr.: enquiry, inquest.

1878 Whatever be the result of the enquête, it seems now quite improbable that there was enough fulminating powder...to cause such an explosion: Lloyd's Wkly., May 19, p. 712. [St.]

*enragé, fem. enragée, adj. and sb.: Fr.: mad, wild, desperate; a lunatic, a desperado.

1722 A Good Picture but less Judgment than Fire Enragé: RICHARDSON, Statues, &c., in Italy, p. 299. 1790 The third part [of the Assembly] is composed of what is called here the Enragés, that is the madmen: Amer. State Papers, For. Relat., Vol. I. p. 382 (1832). 1791 The Enragés, long since known by the name of Jacobins, have lost much in the public opinion: ib., p. 386.

1792 he may resign, he may be superseded, his place may be occupied by an enragé, by Servan, or Prince Charles of Hesse: GIBBON, Life & Lett., p. 151 (1869). 1798 the present chargé...has the character of an enragé: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. VIII. p. 690 (1853).

ens, pl. entia, sb.: Late Lat., a substantival use of ens, coined in a late period of Classical Lat. as pres. part. to esse, = 'to be', 'to exist': an object of sense or speech or thought.

1. anything which exists or which in any way 'is'.

1603 For example, Heuvert is a subject, which is considered both of the Logitian, naturall Philosopher, and Astronomer: but in diuers respects, as of the Logitian, because it is ens; and therefore his subject, as he disputeth de omni scibili: C. HEYDON, Def. Judic. Astrol., p. 218. 1614 Eternity is properly the duration of an uncreated Ens: T. ADAMS, quoted in C. H. SPURGEON'S Treas. David, Vol. IV. p. 471. 1678 Leucippus and his Companion Democritus make the first Principles of all things to be Plenum and Vacuum (Body and Space) whereof one is Ens the other Non-ens, and the differences of Body, which are only Figure, Order and Position, to be the Causes of all other things: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. I. ch. I. p. 8.

2. entity, being.

bef. 1586 the quiddity of Ens...will hardeley agree with a Corslet: SIDNEY, Apol. Poet., p. 55 (1868). bef. 1640 Then Ens is represented as father of the Predicaments, his ten sons: MILTON, College Exercise. [C. E. D.]

3. esp. ens primum, = 'first ens', according to Paracelsus and old chemists, the essence of a substance, or that part of a substance which constitutes its virtue and efficacy.

1599 Why Humour (as 'tis ens) we thus define it | To be a quality of aire or water: B. JONSON, Ev. Man out of his Hum., Prol., Wks., p. 83 (1616). 1657 The Sun of the Microcosm (which Paracelsus calls the Ens or Being of the seed and virtue or power) is Man also generated: H. PINNELL, Philos. Ref., p. 29.

ens entium, phr.: Late Lat.: being of beings, absolute being, supreme being (either abstract or personified).

1604 ens entium: a power above all humane power that lookt for reuerence: D. DIGGES, Four Parad., III. p. 83. bef. 1738 To thee, Creator uncreate | O entium ens! divinely great: M. GREEN, Spleen. [R.]

ens independens, phr.: Late Lat.: that which exists independently of any other existence.

1659 it is the honour of Christ as God that he is ens independens, hath his being of himself: N. HARDY, 1st Ep. John, Nichol's Ed., p. 155/2 (1865).

ens per accidens, phr.: Late Lat.: that which exists only as an accident of ens per se, i.e. a substance.

1829 the scholastic division of existence into ens per se and ens per accidens: Edin. Rev., Vol. 50, p. 212.

ens rationis, phr.: Late Lat.: an entity of reason, a product of a finite mind; opposed to ens reale, that which exists independently of any finite mind.

1567 what ado was made in daily disputations...about genus and species, and the rest of the universals...whether they were entia realia or rationis: JEWEL, Apol. & Def., Wks., p. 612 (1848). 1602 Meane while we leane them to chop logicke in barbarisme, and feede their chimerical conceits with Relatiues of Ens rationis, or rather Ens insensibile insensatum irrealie, infatuatum, fictum: W. WATSON, Quodlibets of Relig. & State, p. 47.

1606 He maketh it Ens Rationis, or a meere Chymera that (as logicians hold) hath no essence or being at all à parte rei: R. PARSONS, Answer to Coke, ch. xiii. p. 320. 1652 Rejected...for entia rationis...fictitious Chymera's, figments of mens brain: J. GAULE, Mag-astro-mancer, p. 107.

1684 nay, though it be a mere ens intentionale or rationis, which is the object of the thought, yet the act of the mind is real: S. CHARNOCK, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. V. p. 294 (1866).

1711 Our streets are filled with...flying pigs... Strange! that one who has all the birds and beasts in nature to choose out of, should live at the sign of an Ens Rationis: Spectator, No. 28, Apr. 2, Vol. I. p. 109 (1826). 1803 All that we see...are mere entia rationis, having no real existence: Edin. Rev., Vol. I, p. 484.

ensemble, sb.: Fr.: whole, general effect, uniformity. See tout ensemble.

1750 these trifling things...collectively form that ensemble: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 15, p. 61 (1774). 1819 but the want of 'ensemble' was very discernible in the movements of the French: Edin. Rev., Vol. 32, p. 211.

1826 The performers were few, but excellent—the ensemble perfect: Ref. on a Ramble to Germany, p. 41. 1839 The French Government obtained a majority of thirteen on the ensemble of the Address, but after its presentation to the King they all resigned: H. GREVILLE, Diary, p. 130.

1840 Examine the picture at a little distance, and the ensemble of the composition and colour is extraordinarily pleasing: THACKERAY, Misc. Essays, p. 177 (1885). 1883 Enriched with bas-reliefs, statuettes, &c., it forms an ensemble of a most imposing character: C. C. PERKINS, Ital. Sculpt., p. 42.

ensemble, adv.: Fr.: together, conjointly; used as adj. by Byron.

1813 Ward talks of going to Holland, and we have partly discussed an ensemble expedition: BYRON, in MOORE'S Life, p. 341 (1875).

ensilage: Eng. fr. Fr. See silo.

entamé, fem. entamée, part.: Fr.: broached, entered upon.

1715 but the difficulty is to find the mony, and I know of none we have by us but that of M. L'auMarie's, which if Mr. Rance (Mary of Modena) and you agree to it, I consent should be entamé on this occasion: In P. M. THORNTON'S Stuart Dynasty, App. I. p. 362 (1890). 1766 Many people think that it would have been more for their credit, had they never entamé that negotiation: In J. H. JESSE'S Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. II. p. 103 (1882).

*entasis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐντασις, = 'a stretching', 'a detention': Archit.: the swelling or slight convexity of the shaft of a column, intended to make the column look as if it were bounded by straight lines.

1664 but for the most part for that solid of a Column which being divided into three parts, has (as some delight to form them, but without any reason or good authority) an Entasis or Swelling: EVELYN, Tr. Freart's Parall. Archit., &c., p. 126. 1820 it related to the entasis or swelling of its beautiful and finely-proportioned columns: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. x. p. 287. 1889 The entasis of the classical column—the addition to the middle part of the shaft beyond a right line joining the upper and lower diameters—has always been known from Roman examples and Renaissance imitations in exaggerated form: Athenæum, Apr. 13, p. 477/3.

entelechia, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐντελέχεια: a term used by Aristotle to signify (first) the state of being complete or in actuality, and (secondly) the activity of that which is in actuality. Anglicised as entelechy.

1603 ARISTOTLE is of opinion, that it is the first Entelechia or primitive act of a natural and organical body, having life potentially: HOLLAND, Tr. Plat. Mor., p. 833. 1640 Entelechies: H. MORE, Psych., l. I. 11, p. 76 (1647). — entelechias: ib., 15, p. 77. 1658 Without deserts and noble acts, which are the balsam of our memories, the Entelechia and soul of our subsistence: SIR TH. BROWN, Hydriotaph., p. 75. 1814 most refreshing to our Scottish entelechies: Edin. Rev., Vol. 23, p. 312.

entendre, vb., used as sb.: Fr.: meaning. See double entendre.

1792 in conversations of ribald entendre: H. BROOKE, Fool of Qual., Vol. II. p. 67.

*entente, sb.: Fr.: understanding.

1877 Esme held out her hand, which he took; and thus the friendly entente was sealed: L. W. M. LOCKHART, Mine is Thine, ch. XXXV. p. 299 (1879). 1883 proclaiming the happy entente with Austria: LADY BLOOMFIELD, Reminisc., Vol. II. p. 48.

*entente cordiale, phr.: Fr.: cordial understanding, esp. friendliness (between two nations or two governments).

1845 but all this breeds bad blood and marn, on the Spaniards' part, the entente cordiale: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. I. p. 237. 1847 if Guizot remains in office Normanby must be recalled, as the only chance of a renewal of the entente cordiale: H. GREVILLE, Diary, p. 189. 1865 The duration or rupture of our entente cordiale lies in your own choice: OUIDA, Strathmore, Vol. I. ch. xxi. p. 317. 1883 The time has come for England to prove that the entente cordiale of the Western Powers is not a perfidious fiction: Standard, No. 18467, p. 5/4.

enteri, antari, anteree, sb.: Arab. 'anteri': a wide shirt or tunic worn under the caftan, and by females in the harem.

1797 The former covering is called antari, and the latter caftan: Encyc. Brit., Vol. VI. p. 403/a. 1819 It was no longer the flowing robe of the Fanar—the anterie of state: T. HOPE, Anast., Vol. I. ch. v. p. 98 (1820). 1836 The dress...consisting of a yef'ek, or an 'anter'ee, and the shintia'yā: E. W. LANE, *Mod. 1. (in the Classical sense) inspiration by a god, divine rapture, inspired ecstasy.

1580 poured into the writte by a certain 'Ενθουσιασμός and celestiall inspiration: E. KIRKE, in Spens. Shep. Cal., Oct., Arg., Wks., p. 476 (1869). 1603 For yet (besides my veins and bones bereft) Of blood and marrow, through thy secret theft | I feel the vertue of my spirit decayed, | Th' Enthousiasmos of my Muse allaid: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Furies, p. 278 (1608). 1603 And this Enthousiasme or spirit of prophesie: HOLLAND, Tr. Plat. Mor., p. 1198.

2. elevation of ideas, poetic inspiration, eager aspiration.

1634 That Hypocrene shall henceforth Poets lacke, | Since more Enthousiasmes are in my sacke: (1639) W. HABINGTON, Castara, Pt. II. p. 64 (1870). 1657 But if you derive these Enthousiasmes from the Wine, my advice is, that you alwayes venture to drink at the same rate: J. D., Tr. Lett. of Voiture, No. 120, Vol. I. p. 191.

3. keen and ardent appreciation of anything, ardent and confident zeal.

1852 No more was wanting to raise the enthusiasm of the army: Tr. Bourrienne's Mem., N. Bonaparte, ch. xl. p. 144.

enthymēma, pl. enthymēmata, Lat. fr. Gk. ἐνθύμημα; enthymeme (— " —), Eng. fr. Fr. enthymème: sb.: according to Aristotle, a rhetorical syllogism of which one or both of the premisses is or are not certain, but probable, being drawn from the general experience of mankind; according to Roman rhetoricians, a syllogism of which one of the premisses is suppressed.

1553 These vnperfect arguments, called Enthymemata, consist partly of likelihoods, and partly of infallible reasons: T. WILSON, Rule of Reas., fol. 31<sup>vo</sup> (1567). 1600 these strange Enthymemes and conclusions: HOLLAND, Tr. Livy, Bk. XXIII. p. 481. 1603 full of over-much sophistical curiositie of enthymemes and arguments too witty and subtle: — Tr. Plat. Mor., p. 352. 1619 Another argument or Enthymeme I frame in this sort: S. NORRIS, Antidote, Bk. VI. ch. xxx. Vol. II. p. 236. 1626 Enthymeme, An vnprofitable Syllogisme: COCKERAM, Pt. I. (2d Ed.). 1642 Must we learn from canons and quaint sermonings, interlined with barbarous latin, to illustrate a period, to wreath an enthymema with masterous dexterity? MINTOS, Apol. Smect., Wks., Vol. I. p. 212 (1806). 1727 Why, an Enthymem (replied Crambe) is when the Major is indeed married to the Minor, but the Marriage kept secret: POPE, Mem. M. Scriblerus, Bk. I. ch. vii. Wks., Vol. VI. p. 132 (1757).

*entourage, sb.: Fr.: surroundings, environment; the friends, advisers, and suite of a person of rank.

1834 She says nothing can go on worse than the entourage of Charles X.: H. GREVILLE, Diary, p. 41. 1837 One of the first things was to obtain precise and accurate ideas of the position and entourage of the place: J. F. COOPER, Europe, Vol. I. p. 156. 1860 there was a taint about the house and its entourages: THACKERAY, Pendennis, Vol. II. ch. xxi. p. 235 (1879). 1865 He is not exempt from the influence of his entourage, though he is well aware how corrupt that is: GREVILLE, Memoirs, 3rd Ser., l. x. 314. 1874 so religious is your whole entourage while in Tirol that...: MISS R. H. BUSK, Tirol, p. 149. 1881 I left gaps here and there in the entourage of banks in order to admit more sunlight and air: F. G. HEATH, Garden Wild, ch. viii. p. 154. 1884 The Prince...felt lost without the accustomed entourage which he had attracted to Joyeuse: J. H. SHORTHOUSE, Schoolm. Mark, Pt. II. ch. iv.

*Entozōa, sb. pl.: New Lat. fr. Gk. ἐντός, = 'within', 'inside', and ζῷον, = 'an animal': intestinal worms; internal parasites.

*entracte, sb.: Fr.: the interval between two acts of an opera; the incidental music played during the same; a musical interlude adapted to fill up the said interval.

1871 They were quickly placed on horseback before their captors, and once more we continued our journey, highly amused with the little entracte: SIR S. W. BAKER, Nile Tributaries, ch. xii. p. 209. 1883 the beauty of Stella Walton was creating an evident sensation, and during the entracte a whole battery of lorgnettes was opened upon her from the stalls: L. OLIPHANT, Allison's Pets, ch. iii. p. 45 (1884). 1885 The instrumental movements include an overture in regular form and two entractes: Athenæum, Dec. 5, p. 740/3.

entrada, sb.: Sp.: receipts, revenue, income.

1655 His own revenues of a large extent, | But in the expectation of his uncle | And guardian's entradas, by the course | Of nature to descend on him, a match | For the best subject's blood: MASSINGER, Guardian, v. 4, Wks., p. 362/1 (1839).

*entrain, sb.: Fr.: heartiness, spirit, animation.

1859 the result of all this is to be seen in a greater degree of entrain than can perhaps be found in any other congregation of holiday-seeking Britons: Once a Week, Oct. 8, p. 304/a. 1887 there is an entrain about the way in which the Contadini threw their soul into their songs which can never be conveyed by printed paper: MISS R. H. BUSK, Folk-songs of Italy, p. 36.

entrainement, sb.: Fr.: enthusiasms, allurements.

1842 of gold-headed canes, valuable arms, picturesque antiquities, with what eloquent entrainement might he not speak! THACKERAY, Miscellanies, Vol. IV. p. 34 (1857).

entrates, sb. pl.: Eng. fr. It. entrata (Florio): revenue, income, rents.

entrax: Lat. fr. Gk. See anthrax.

1526 a venomous apostume that some men call entrax or saynt chrystofers euyl: Grete Herball, ch. ccxcv.

entre chien et loup, phr.: Fr., lit. 'between dog and wolf': in the twilight.

*entre nous, phr.: Fr.: between ourselves, in confidence.

1767 Yet still I cannot (—entre Nous,—) But think they had their failings too: C. ANSTEV, Poet. Epist., Let. I. 1772 Yet, entre nous, I do not believe that I shall be able to get out of this town before you come into it: GIBSON, Life & Lett., p. 224 (1869). 1803 These malicious reports, and schemes, entre nous, originated with Mrs. Harriott: M. EDGEWORTH, Belinda, Vol. II. ch. xxx. p. 319 (1832). 1808 Entre nous, had I known it in time, I should have contrived to put the admiral on his guard: Edin. Rev., Vol. II. p. 298. 1818 mind, it's all entre nous, | But you know love, I never keep secrets from you: T. MOORE, Fudge Family, p. 6. 1832 But then Saville, entre nous, is suspected: LORD LYTON, Goodolph., ch. xvi. p. 27/2 (New Ed.). 1850 I have often fancied, entre nous, that my sister had it in her eye: THACKERAY, Pendennis, Vol. I. ch. viii. p. 88 (1879).

entrecat, sb.: Fr.: caper.

1797 the entre-chat, being neither cut, beat, nor crossed by the feet, is deprived of that life and brilliancy which are its chief merit: Encyc. Brit., Vol. v. p. 668/1. 1819 with such diversity of entrecats: HANS BUSK, Desert, 715. — cut a light entrecat and mount the skies: — l'estriade, l. 318. 1822—3 After a rapid yet graceful succession of entrecats, Fenella introduced a slow movement, which terminated the dance: SCOTT, Pov. Peak, ch. xxx. p. 351 (1886). 1841 Around one quadrille party a more numerous audience was collected than around the others, and the entrecats of one of the gentlemen were much applauded: LADY BLESSINGTON, Idler in France, Vol. I. p. 95. 1847 Gracious me what an entrecat! BARHAM, Ingolds. Leg., p. 476 (1865).

entrecôte, sb.: Fr.: meat between the ribs.

1841 Any dispute about the relative excellence of the beefsteak cut from the filet, as is usual in France, and of the entrecôte, must henceforth be idle and absurd: THACKERAY, Misc. Essays, &c., p. 385 (1885). 1845 Entre côte du Bausf ['of beef'].—This is the portion of the animal which lies under the long ribs, or those thick slices of delicate meat which may be got from between them: BREGION & MILLER, Pract. Cook, p. 41.

1882 A semi-official entrefilet runs as follows: Standard, Dec. 20, p. 5.

entremets, sb.: Fr. (Cotgr.) for Old Fr. entremes (which was early Anglicised): a dish served after the principal course of meat at a dinner or banquet. The word being often pl., a false singular entremet is sometimes found in English.

1609 Sir Edward Hoby...comes in like an entremets with a work of his dedicated to the relapsed ladies: DUDLEY CARLETON, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. 1. p. 100 (1848). 1738 It is already very easy to distinguish at sight the puny son of a compound entremets, from the lusty offspring of beef and pudding: LORD CHESTERFIELD, in Common Sense, No. 54, Misc. Wks., Vol. 1. p. 88 (1777). 1759 Next are the entremets, or second course dishes, of which I shall put down about forty: W. VERRAL, Cookery, p. 157. 1778 With such obsolete prejudices I certainly am not very proper at modern suppers, yet with such entremets one would not wholly miss them: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VII. p. 64 (1858). 1786 Rich Entremets, whose name none knows, | Ragouts, French Tourtes, and Fricandeaux: H. MORE, Florio, 649, p. 42. 1845 Entremets.—Is the second course, which comes between the roast meat and the desserts: BREGION & MILLER, Pract. Cook, p. 41. 1856 I had only one competitor in the dispensation of this entremet [rat-soup]: E. K. JONSON, Forest, x. 1671 [See antistrophe]. 1710 CONGREVE, Wks., Vol. III. p. 433 (1761). [Jodrell] 1787 [Gray, in his Pindarics] had shackled himself with strophe, antistrophe, and epode: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. III. p. 97 (1857).

*epōnymos, -mus, pl. epōnymī, sō.: Gk. ἐπώνυμος, = 'giving a name to': one after whom anything is named, as the heroes after whom the tribes and demes of Attica were called. As adj. the term was applied to one of the archons at Athens, and one of the ephors at Sparta, who gave his name to his year of office.

1887 He [Robert of Brunne] refers to Thomas of Kendale and Master Edmond—poetic chroniclers otherwise unknown—as his authorities for the story of King Engle, who gave his name to England, and of Skardyng and Flayn, the eponymi of Scarborough and Flamborough: Athenæum, Dec. 3, p. 749/3.

epopeia, sō.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐποποιία: a heroic poem in hexameter verse; hence, an epic poem generally. Anglicised as epopee.

1591 Briefly, Aristotle and the best censurers of Poesie, would have the Epopeia, that is, the heroical Poem, should ground on some historie: SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, Appl. Poet., in Haslewood's Eng. Poets and Poety, Vol. II. p. 140 (1815). 1779 If we believe the representations of some writers, Poems equal in length to the most celebrated epopeas of Greece and Rome have been handed down, without the aid of letters, from the remotest antiquity to the present day: V. KNOX, Ess., 134. [R.]

epos, sō.: Gk. ἔπος, = 'word', 'verse': a heroic poem. Wrongly used for pl. ἔπη by English scholars.

epulo, sō.: Lat.: a glutton, gourmand.

1583 That riche Epulo, of whom Saint Luke maketh mention, was for his dronkenness, and riotous excesse, condemned, &c.: STUBBES, Anat. Ab., fol. 65 r.

épuration, sō.: Fr.: purification. épuré, fem. -ée, part.: purified.

1883 The French people...has been offended by...the Épuration of its magistracy: Sat. Rev., Vol. 56, p. 489/1.

1883 Although shorn as occasion serves of their full powers and épurée, as it is termed, the independence of the Judicature is suspected: Daily Telegraph, Jan. 22, p. 5.

épure, sō.: Fr.: diagram, plan.

*equator (= 二), æquator, sō.: Eng. fr. Late Lat. æquator, noun of agent to Lat. æquare, = 'to make equal': an imaginary line formed by the intersection with the earth's surface of the plane which passes through the middle of, and at right angles to, the earth's axis; also, Astron. the great circle of the celestial sphere on the same plane; also, humorously, the waist of a stout person.

1391 [See equinox]. 1598 Antiesi, those that dwell vnder one halfe meridian and paralell of like distance from the Equator, the one northwarde, the other southward: FLORIO.

1617 The Æquator compasseth the middle swelling of the Celestiall Sphere betweene both the Poles of the world...the Æquator of the earth: F. MORVSON, Ita., Pt. III. p. 65.

1641 You will find some such as will prognosticate your date, and tell you that, after your long summer solstice, the Equator calls for you, to reduce you to the ancient and equal house of Libra: MILTON, Animadv., Wks., Vol. I. p. 177 (1806).

1646 its Polary parts should never incline or veer unto the Æquator: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. II. ch. II. p. 43 (1686).

1666 the heat is not so unsufferable under the Æquator as where more remote: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 8 (1677).

bef. 1667 They who above do various Circles find, | Say like a King th' Æquator Heav'n does bind: COWLEY, Wks., Vol. I. p. 22 (1707).

1678 That the Mundane Sphere is so framed, in respect of the Disposition of the Æquator and Ecliptic, as renders the greatest part of the Earth uninhabitable to Men and most other Animals: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. I. ch. II. p. 78.

1877 Mr. Hopper rubbed his equator—but in the sense of a man who is invited to perform a miracle: L. W. M. LOCKHART, Mine is Thine, ch. xv. p. 135 (1879).

eques, pl. equites, sō.: Lat.: a knight. In Ancient Rome the knights were originally three hundred horse-soldiers of patrician rank. Subsequently the order, which possessed important political privileges, consisted of wealthy citizens whose census amounted to more than four hundred thousand sesterces.

Mor.*, p. 974. — the Acquinox of the Spring: ib., p. 1313. 1604 'Tis to thy virtue a just equinox. | The one as long as the other: SHAKS., Oth., ii. 3. 129. bef. 1627 Shepherds of people had need know the calenders of tempests in state, which are commonly greatest when things grow to equality, as natural tempests about the equinoctia: BACON, Ess., Seditions. [Davies] 1651 He...gave me a water which he said was only rain-water of the autumnal equinox: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. i. p. 284 (1872). 1665 the heat not only under the Equinox, but the Tropiques when the Sun comes to the Vertex, is much more intense...than it is about the Polar Circles: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 39 (1677).

*equipage (— — —), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. équipage (Cotgr.).

1. equipment, appointments, all things duly provided for an appearance in public, or a journey, or voyage, or expedition, whether made by an individual, or by a number of individuals (as a military force, a fleet, a ship); array, arrangement.

1593 man by man they march'd in equipage: PEELE, Ord. Garter, Wks., p. 587/2 (1861). 1594 Should I, that...march amidst his royal equipage, | Embase myself to speak to such as they? — Looking Glasse, Wks., p. 132/1. 1609 A dearer birth than this his love had brought, | To march in ranks of better equipage: SHAKS., Sen., xxxii. 1614 as good an Equipage as you would wish: B. JONSON, Bart. Fair, Wks., Vol. ii. sig. A 5 v<sup>o</sup> (1634-40). 1645 upon a sudden he put this Army in perfect equipage: HOWELL, Lett., i. xvii. p. 33. 1646 The Duke of Pastrana came that summer to Paris in another such splendid Equipage: HOWELL, Lewis XIII., p. 14. 1648 putting myself in a suitable equipage I got into the council-chamber: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. iii. p. 34 (1872). 1657 After the finishing of one great siege and two small ones, and an aboad of fifteen days in Flanders without Equipage: J. D., Tr. Lett. of Voiture, No. 123, Vol. i. p. 195. 1663 Their Arms and Equipage did fit, | As well as Vertues, parts and wit: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. i. Cant. i. p. 47.

2. a retinue or train.

1580 teache her tread aloft in buskin fine, | With queint Bellona in her equipage: SPENS., Shep. Cal., Oct., 114. 1665 Next day he resolved to fight, and accordingly divides his Army into three: one part he assigns to Amet-cawn... another to Tzardi-cawn...and the last unto himself: in which equipage the whole Camp removed to Zietelpore: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 63 (1677). — his kindred and friends in their best equipage assemble: ib., p. 307. 1693 A Country Squire, with the Equipage of a Wife and two Daughters: CONGREVE, Old Batchelor, iv. 8. [C.] 1715 the Apostolical Equipage, gives a Dignity even to that: RICHARDSON, Theor. Painting, p. 168. 1785 Our palaces, our ladies, and our pomp | Of equipage, our gardens, and our sports: COWPER, Task, i. Poems, Vol. i. p. 25 (1808).

2 a. a complete set of utensils and appurtenances applied to some specific use.

1711 Your paper is a part of my tea equipage: Spectator, No. 92, June 15, Vol. i. p. 344 (1826).

3. a private carriage with horses and servants. This special use is perhaps due to a mistaken idea that the equi- has to do with the Latin for 'a horse'.

1855 Several aristocratical equipages had been attacked even in Hyde Park: MACAULAY, Hist. Eng., ch. xxii. [C. E. D.]

4. equality, equal proportion. This occasional use is a mere error, the equi- being supposed to have to do with the Latin for 'equal', as in equilibrium, and perhaps originating in a mere clerical or typographical error for equipoise.

1598 Fals. I will not lend thee a penny. Pist. I will retort the sum in equipage: SHAKS., Merry Wives, ii. 2 (Quartos). 1613 When loe, (O Fate!) his work, not seeming fit | To walk in equipage with better wit, | Is kept from light: W. BROWNE, Brit. Pastorals, Bk. i. 2. [R.] 1655 examples of men... stand in so near equipage with the commands of God: SANDERSON, Wks., ii. Pref., 10. [Davies]

5. a collection of small implements carried either in an étui, or on a châtelaine, fashionable in 18 c.

bef. 1762 Behold this equipage by Mathers wrought, | With fifty guineas (a great penn'orth) bought, | See on the toothpick Mars and Cupid strive: | And both the struggling figures seem alive: LADY M. W. MONTAGU, Town Eclogues. [C.]

ëquipondium, sb.: Lat.: equipoise, equality of wit.

1664 and that therefore there would be an error and mistake in summing up the dimensions and ëquipondium of its members at a more moderate distance with the same measures and proportions: EVELYN, Tr. Frear's Parall. Archit., Pt. ii. p. 108.

equivocator (— — — — —), sb.: Eng. fr. Late Lat. aequivocator, noun of agent to aequivocari, = 'to be called by the same name': one who uses ambiguous language, one who prevaricates.

1605 here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale: SHAKS., Macb., ii. 3. 9. 1621 The second rank is of lyars and equivocators, as Apollo Pythius, and the like: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., Pt. 1, Sec. 2, Mem. 1, Subs. 2, Vol. ii. p. 62 (1827). 1828 "False equivocator that thou art," said the King: SCOTT, Fair Md. of Perth, ch. xiii. p. 170 (1886).

equuleus, sb.: Lat., 'a young horse': the name in Ancient Rome of a kind of rack.

1883 The first sight of the beasts, or the equuleus was quite enough: Sat. Rev., Vol. 55, p. 335.

*ëra, aera, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Lat. aera, = 'counters', pl. of aes, = 'copper', 'bronze', 'money': a period of years reckoned from a fixed epoch (see epoch 1); a specific period of time; an epoch from which the years of a period of time are computed.

1646 that custom having an elder ëra, than this Chronology affordeth: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. iv. ch. ix. p. 165 (1686). 1717 the change of my scene of life, from Windsor-forest to the side of the Thames...one of the grand ëra's of my days, and may be called a notable period in so inconsiderable a history: POPE, Lett., Wks., Vol. viii. p. 17 (1757). 1742 Auspicious ëra! E. YOUNG, Night Thoughts, iii. p. 45 (1773). 1749 I am extremely pleased with your continuation of the History of the Reformation, which is one of those important ëras that deserves your utmost attention: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Lett., Vol. i. No. 117, p. 255 (1774). 1749 It will be a new ëra (or, as my Lord Baltimore calls it, a new ëra), in English History: HOR. WALPOLÉ, Lett., Vol. ii. p. 185 (1857). 1877 the Christian ëra: Times, Feb. 17. [St.]

Erd Geist, phr.: Ger.: earth-spirit.

1833 "Of twenty millions," asks the author of Sartor Resartus, "that have read and spouted this thunder-speech of the Erd Geist, are there yet twenty of us that have learned the meaning thereof": G. A. SALA's Quite Alone, Vol. i. ch. i. p. 7 (1864).

*Erebus: Lat. fr. Gk. Ἔρεβος: name of a space of utter darkness between Earth and Hades.

? 1582 Shee crieth on the Erebus darcknesse: R. STANFURST, Tr. Virgil's Aen., Bk. iv. p. 113 (1880). 1590 This arm should send him down to Erebus, | To shroud his shame in darkness of the night: MARLOWE, I Tamburl., iv. 1, Wks., p. 26/1 (1858). 1594 These nymphs of Erebus: PEELE, Alcazar, Prol., Wks., p. 425/2 (1861). 1596 SHAKS., Merch. of Ven., v. 87.

erector (— — —), sb.: Eng. fr. Late Lat. erector, noun of agent to Lat. erigere, = 'to erect', 'raise': one who raises up, one who founds, one who causes to be built.

bef. 1550 That cheiffe is nowe erector | And formost of the rynges: Quoted in J. SKELTON's Wks., Vol. ii. p. 410/1 (Dyce, 1843). 1579 the first erector of the [theloy band]: NORTH, Tr. Plutarch, p. 295 (1612). 1648 the erectors of Jeroboam's calves: MOUNTAGU, Devout Ess., Pt. i. p. 94. [T.] 1822-3 William Peveril...became the erector of that Gothic fortress, which...gives the name of Castleton to the adjacent village: SCOTT, Pev. Peak, ch. i. p. 21 (1886).

*ergo, adv.: Lat.: therefore; hence, an argument, a positive conclusion. The clown in Hamlet corrupts it to argal.

1533 this your argument, 'God may make his body in many places at once; ergo, it is so': TYNDALE, Answer, p. 234 (1850). 1538 such title of prescription was at the common law. Ergo it abydeeth as it was at the common law: Tr. Littleton's Tenures, Bk. ii. ch. x. fol. 38 v<sup>o</sup>. 1549 He goeth to his death boldly... Ergo he dyeth in a iuste cause: LATIMER, 7 Sermon, bef. K. Edu. VI., iv. p. 116 (1866). 1552 Some courtiers are honest. Ergo, some honest men are courtiers: T. WILSON, Rule of Reas., fol. 20 v<sup>o</sup> (1567). 1589 that spit ergo in the mouth of euerie one they meete: NASHE, in Greene's Menaphon, p. 8 (1880). 1596 I say unto thee, I bid thy master cut out the gown; but I did not bid him cut it to pieces: ergo, thou liest: SHAKS., Tam. Shr., iv. 3. 129. 1602 he is a Jesuit: ergo silence: ergo yeeld: W. WATSON, Quodlibets of Relig. & State, p. 16. 1604 if the water come to him and drown him, he drowns not himself: argal, he that is not guilty of his own death shortens not his own life: SHAKS., Ham., v. 1, 21. bef. 1627 my master is dead, and now I serve my mistress; ergo, I am a masterless man: MIDDLETON, Mayor Queenb., ii. 3, Wks., Vol. ii. p. 32 (1885). 1663 but Bear-garden | Has no such pow'r, Ergo 'tis none: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. i. Cant. iii. p. 261. 1675 the inquisitive disceptators...with their altercation and Ergo's: J. SMITH, Christ. Relig. Appeal, Bk. i. ch. v. § 2, p. 29. 1696 but these virtues may be without it, and ergo, it does not consist in them: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. ii. p. 9 (1865). — The time is short, we cannot live long; Ergo, let us live merrily: ib., p. 17. 1704 the following syllogism: Words are but wind; and learning is nothing but words; ergo, learning is nothing but wind: SWIFT, Tale of a Tub, § viii. Wks., p. 80/1 (1866). bef. 1733 Then comes the Author with his Ergo: R. NORTH, Examen, i. 1. 12, p. 21 (1740). 1825 Because public officers die poor: Ergo—they are honest: Congress. Debates, Vol. iv. Pt. ii. p. 1684. 1863 And, ergo, on the same premisses, I, &c.: C. READE, Hard Cash, Vol. i. p. 34.
